Police sport jeans, fuzz, hold back report details

By DON COLLINS
Colonist staff

That man who looks like Wild Bill Hickok with a five-o'clock shadow is your friendly neighborhood policeman.

He has long shuddered at the nickname "fuzz," but it's there on his cheeks in second-day growth today, serving the purpose of a somewhat odd strike weapon, along with the jeans and other civilian clothes that give him that gun-on-hip wild west look.

It's all part of the picture of a police strike that began legally but in limited fashion Wednesday in Victoria, Esquimalt and Oak Bay.

Both the police unions and administration said the public was being served in normal fashion.

The odd appearance wasn't interfering with duty, but the big weapon was some internal strategy that had no effect on the public, but which threatened to deal an economic blow to the municipalities.

While police union spokesmen didn't want to say what it was, the administration said it was a matter of not filling in details in reports—something that would necessitate overtime work and pay when the dispute is over.

"It will have to be done on someone's time—on overtime, and the longer this goes on the more overtime there will be," explained Victoria's deputy police chief, Jim Smith.

He said sub-headings, such as names and locations, were being put into such reports as those dealing with accidents, and that the rest of the essential information was recorded in the individual officer's notebook for use in the future.

Like others, Smith said there were no problems Wednesday.

"The men are doing the job," he said.

Some municipal officials feared that the switch from uniforms to civvies would make it difficult for citizens to identify police officers, but the very obvious holster and gun seemed to answer that concern.

"Then again, the cop could be mistaken for some visiting Albertan," cracked one sidewalk observer.

At any rate, police union spokesman Sgt. Bryan Bailey of the Victoria Police Association said officers have other means of identifying themselves when the occasion arises.

Bailey said he wanted to assure the public it would get full protection.

"We realize we have a duty to the public and we intend to carry that duty out," he said.

B.C. Federation of Labor secretary Dave MacIntyre, who has been acting as chief negotiator for the police added: "Our dispute is with the employer, not the public."

Police were in a legal strike position Tuesday when they were informed that mediator Bob Almgren had reported out of the dispute.

Involved are some 190 police officers below the rank of inspector. Their contracts in the three

NATO enjoys edge on Reds, surprising report claims

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — A liberal defence group says NATO is more powerful than the Warsaw Pact military forces, having outspent them for years.

The statement Wednesday by the Washington-based Centre for Defence Information contrasts with the Carter administration's view that the communist bloc is leaping ahead of the West in defence spending. That belief has led the U.S. government to plan for military expenditures of $1 trillion over the next five years.

"In this presidential election year it has become fashionable to denigrate the power of our armed forces," said retired Rear-Admiral Gene La Rocque, director of the centre. "But our study shows that the United States military is not weak or starved for funds."

The report said NATO had more nuclear weapons than the Soviet Union and was superior in virtually all elements of national power. And NATO "will retain the advantage in the future as plans to produce more than 20,000 nuclear weapons over the next decade are implemented."

The report noted that U.S. Defence Secretary Harold Brown said in February that by most relevant measures, the U.S. remained the military equal or superior to the Soviet Union.

It added: "Even utilizing the CIA's questionable methodology for comparing military budgets (which assumes that the Soviets pay as much as the U.S. does for soldiers and weapons), combined NATO military spending has exceeded that of the Warsaw Pact for many years."

The report said that in 1979, NATO spent at least $215 billion, compared to $175 billion for the Warsaw pact

Second lowest bid wins outfall project

A $3,415,000 contract to replace the trouble-plagued Clover Point sewage outfall was awarded Wednesday to the San Francisco-based company of Peter Kiewit Sons Co. Ltd.

But that may not be the final price tag.

The Capital Region Board adopted a recommendation from its solid waste management and sewage disposal committee that Kiewit's bid—the second-lowest—be accepted although the company requested a clause allowing it to claim for cost overruns if unforeseen problems crop up on the job.

Kiewit will install 3,500 feet of coated steel pipe—already acquired by the board at a cost of $214,000—from the Clover Point pumping station out to sea. The job is to be completed by November.

The low bidder, K. Viney Contracting Ltd. of Vancouver, was ruled ineligible by the committee's engineering consultants owing to inexperience and failure to meet bid bond specifications.

Directors refused to consider a letter from Viney which committee chairman Ald. Robert Wright said "substantially altered" the terms of its original $2,979,000 bid.

Wright did not elaborate on the Viney matter, but said he stood by the original recommendation for Kiewit, after having considered the letter.

The engineering consultants, CH2M Hill Canada Ltd., did not review in detail the three other bids, which ranged in price from $4.8 million to $7.3 million, reporting that apart from the cost-overrun clause, Kiewit's bid met the tender specifications in all respects.

The bid was accepted

SCALPEL TRADED

BALTIMORE (AP) — Johns Hopkins Hospital doctors say they have found a way to determine whether a lung tumor is harmless.

The procedure could eliminate the need for thousands of operations. (See also Page 28).

By using a computer-controlled radiological scanner, the doctors found that the density of a tumor can be used as a way of accurately and quickly determining whether a growth is dangerous.

Man's chest pains fault of an unknown brother

MOSCOW (AP) — Doctors found the unborn embryo of a 40-year-old man's twin in the man's chest after he complained of pains and breathing difficulty, a Soviet newspaper says.

Surgeons at the Azerbaijan State Institute for Medical Training thought at first that the man had a benign tumor, said the Baku Worker, a newspaper in the Azerbaijan capital.

But they found "a thick-walled, many-chambered cyst of a very large size that turned out to be an undeveloped human embryo," chief physician Panakh Alievich Aliev is quoted as saying.

"In the course of further examinations the surgeons found hair and bone."

The embryo had "a head with hair covering the back of it," Aliev said. "On the face there were undeveloped, swollen eye sockets. There was a palate and even an ossified tooth in the upper jaw.

"The body was covered with a soft, fatty membrane-like paste."

The embryo had caused one of the man's lungs to be only a third of the usual size, with only one lobe instead of three.

The man was identified only as "N" and was said to be a driver in Baku.

Abortion program in line

A pilot program announced barely a month ago to reduce the number of abortions in B.C. may get the axe as a result of provincial budget cuts.

A provincial health ministry spokesman said an estimated $290 million shortfall in provincial revenues means a number of programs may be cut back or eliminated, including the pilot program announced May 28 for the Interior.

The spokesman said the health ministry proposal involves six different centres. The proposal involves hiring additional staff, and the cost would depend on how many centres were actually approved.

Float plane lands safely in farm field

Five passengers and a pilot escaped injury when an Airwest Beaver float plane made an emergency landing about 6:15 p.m. Wednesday in a farmer's field near Maple Bay.

Duncan RCMP, who investigated, said the aircraft was on a scheduled flight from Duncan to Vancouver.

It landed upright in a field off the 1300 block of Herd Road.

Saudis fume, U.S. cools F-15 snub

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The U.S. state department Wednesday sought to play down a public dispute with Saudi Arabia by not commenting on sharp Saudi reaction to a congressional move to block its purchase of new weaponry.

Saudi ambassador Sheikh Faisal al Hejelan said Tuesday the United States was putting Israel ahead of its real interests in the Middle East and hinted his country might turn elsewhere for weapons if denied the equipment.

In Riyadh on Wednesday, Saudi Defence Minister Prince Sultan ibn Abdulaziz said Saudi Arabia would not take no for an answer.

"Our reply to this is that the kingdom will never ask for a weapon and be refused," he told Saudi military graduates.

The Saudi officials were reacting to a letter from 68 senators urging President Carter to refuse the sale of extra fuel tanks and multiple ejection bomb racks for U.S.-built F-15 jet fighter aircraft.

"We read a lot of speeches. We see a lot of statements. We respond to some but not to others," state department spokesman John Trattner said when asked about the Saudi statements.

The statements by Saudi officials used exceptionally sharp language in view of the close trade and security ties between their country and the United States.

U.S. officials said the Saudis have conveyed the same views privately before announcing them in public.

"It is long past time that the Israeli problem is placed in perspective and other vital interests of the United States, its key friends, the international community, world peace and certainly the overwhelming majority of people in the Middle East . . .," Faisal said in his statement.

"Much more than just the equipment which the statement today opposes selling to the kingdom is available through other sources—and without restrictions or conditions," he added.

Sultan's speech, reported by the Saudi press agency, blamed supporters of Israel for the Senate letter.

"We say to the Zionist lobby, which is putting pressure on during the period of the U.S. elections, that you are defeated wherever you are," he said.

Boil it, Saltspring drinkers told

Saltspring Islanders who get their water from St. Mary Lake are being advised to boil their water or get it from another source until health officials can determine what is causing unusual odors and tastes in lake water.

Regional health officer Dr. Allan Arneil said Wednesday that the cause of the odors and tastes has not been determined, and tests are being done on lake water at the moment. Until the results of those tests are available some time next week, Arneil said residents should take precautions in using lake water.

Arneil said that about 1,500 Saltspring Island residents take their water from the lake, either directly or from a water system which uses the lake as a source.

No complaints about unusual odors or tastes have been received from people drawing their water from the island's other main water source, Maxwell Lake, Arneil said.

Super-secrecy hides two-way talks

By JIM HUME
Colonist staff

Premier Bennett has ordered a veil of secrecy drawn across Friday's Alberta-B.C. cabinet meeting.

His press agent, Hall Leiren, delivered a memorandum on Wednesday to political reporters assigned to cover what the premier has termed "the historic meeting," spelling out the ground rules but giving no basic reasons for extraordinarily tight security.

The rules state that all reporters, even those assigned to the legislative press gallery and already having security clearance, will require special credentials for the conference.

Reporters have also been informed that once Bennett and Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed enter Government House to start their one-day session, all reporters will be asked to leave the grounds of Government House.

It also proclaims "there will be no statements issued, or interviews, between the time the meeting starts and the 3:30 p.m. windup."

In effect, the press restrictions mean that reporters will be confined to questions on the run as Lougheed and Bennett leave the legislative buildings shortly before 10 a.m. and further questions on the fly as the two leave their car and go behind the doors of Government House.

The press gallery executive immediately protested the arrangements and objected to the ruling that once the meeting starts, reporters will be asked to leave and await a 4:30 p.m. press conference back at the Legislature.

Gallery president Jake Banky, in his official protest to Leiren, said all members of the gallery "take strong exception to the press arrangements made by your office . . . We question the need for special passes for gallery members who already carry government-issued passes which adequately identify them.

"More important, we wonder at the reasoning behind the decision to banish the press from the grounds of Government House once the meeting gets under way.

"Are you suggesting that, otherwise, we would be peeking through the windows?

"Surely it would have been more appropriate to observe the normal courtesies granted to the press on occasions of this sort."

There had been no response late Wednesday from Leiren or the premier.

Bennett indicated earlier this week that the tight security was being ordered to enable the Alberta delegates to the meeting "to feel secure," but members of the Alberta press corps contacted Wednesday expressed the same dismay and concern as that expressed by their counterparts in B.C.

They say it isn't Lougheed's style to avoid the media or hide behind security blankets.

Leiren and Bennett were also playing coy on the times of arrival and the subject to a review by the region's solicitor of the inclusion of the cost overrun clause.

Wright said the clause didn't worry him because he was confident engineering studies of the seabed in the area of the new outfall had fully covered the underwater terrain.

Wright pointed out that in any case, claims would have to be submitted to an independent arbitrator "and the company might lose."

Kiewit's bid had "several significant advantages" in its method of installation, the committee reported.

Among them:

- Clover Point would not be used as the construction site, reducing complaints from nearby residents.
- Each section of pipe installed would increase the distance from shore of the sewage discharge.
- The installed sections would be ballasted within hours of placement, reducing the risk of damage during stormy weather.
- The method has been used in installing the majority of marine outfalls, reducing the risk of failure or substantial construction problems.

The board also ratified the appointment of engineer Richard J. Brewer to oversee this and other waste disposal projects on a $40 per hour fee for service basis.

Axworthy parties upset

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Manitoba Liquor Control Commission is upset over two all-night parties held by federal cabinet minister Lloyd Axworthy at a hotel here last weekend.

A commission spokesman said Wednesday the parties, held during the national Liberal convention, may have contravened provincial liquor laws.

About 100 people, including members of Prime Minister Trudeau's staff, convention delegates, politicians, reporters and party workers attended a Saturday night party which ended after dawn Sunday.

A smaller party, which ended about 6 a.m. Saturday, was attended by about 12 people, including Tom Axworthy, brother of the federal employment and immigration minister, and the prime minister's senior advisor.

Both Axworthy brothers defended the parties, saying they took place after the hotel was closed to the public.

"I think that what you do privately after that is up to the owner or whoever he invites," the minister said in an interview. A third Axworthy brother, Bob, is principal partner in the operation of the hotel.

Barry Crackston, assistant manager of the liquor commission, rejected the notion.

"The hotel is considered a public place, and once it closes at 1.30 a.m., nobody but the employees or the owners should be inside."

The commission has received a report on the matter and will decide if a hearing is necessary, he said.

WESTERN WINNERS

WINNIPEG (CP) — Five tickets worth $100,000 each and five worth $10,000 each, were picked Wednesday night in the Western Express Lottery Draw.

The $100,000 tickets are: 1476019, 1260385, 2112280, 2464125, 3116890.

The $10,000 tickets are: 2772194, 1963051, 2364368, 3234400, 2285860.

There are prizes of $1,000 for tickets with the last six digits of the top draws, $100 for the last five digits and $25 for the last four.

Fuzzy protest

municipalities expired Dec. 31. Another 115 in Saanich have been bargaining alongside the others, but are not included in the strike action because their contract doesn't expire until the end of this year.

The core-area forces have been bargaining jointly for the first time with the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association. In the past, they negotiated with their individual police boards.

The main barrier to agreement is standardization of core-area contracts.

Carl Anshelm, general manager and chief negotiator for GVLRA, says the police have been offered parity with their counterparts in Vancouver, who have what he describes as the best police agreement in Canada. He also says they want standardization only if they can get the best features from each of the existing contracts and ditch the others.

But, if they could, the police would haul Anshelm in for running the wrong way on a one-way street on that issue. They say GVLRA wants to give them standardization on the basis of the lowest common denominator and they aren't about to accept it.

The first-class Victoria area constable gets $1,845 a month. Parity with Vancouver would take him to $2,035.

By the end of the first day there were no moves to put an end to the job action or to initiate new talks.

The civilian clothes and non-shaving policy was something originated in May, 1978, by Saanich police.

"We're not shaving—it's an individual thing," said Bailey. "But I imagine peer pressure would be felt by anyone who kept shaving."

That left the strike with one touch of inequality.

The women officers will greet each day of the strike with the same smooth faces.

accommodation arrangements made for the Alberta cabinet and Lougheed.

"They're scattered all over the place," Leiren said. "I don't know where they are staying other than that Premier Lougheed will be at the Harbour Towers."

Bennett has a permanent suite at Harbour Towers.

Other ministers will be staying at Laurel Point and the Empress.

On arrival times, Leiren was equally vague.

He said he knew that some of the Albertans were flying in Wednesday "presumably to take a day off as tourists Thursday" and others will be flying in later today. He said he had no arrival times.

The only details provided at the B.C. end of the conference note that at 9:15 a.m. Lougheed will visit Bennett in his office, leave 15 minutes later for Government House and that neither premier will surface again until 4:30 p.m. when they have agreed to field questions from the press.

In Victoria, Bennett was refusing to officially discuss what might be on the agenda for the "historic" meeting but Albertan aides made no bones about the three key items to be discussed.

As reported in Wednesday's Colonist the top items will include resource ownership and development, transportation and port development.

If a consensus is reached quickly on those items the cabinets will move on to other matters involving constitutional reform as published Wednesday.

Alberta, with no coastline and dependent on B.C. ports for access to the Pacific Rim, has always been a strong supporter of the proposal to create a superport at Ridley Island near Prince Rupert. It has already committed millions of dollars to the development of grain elevators at the port.

While B.C. cabinet ministers would not confirm the suggestion, it is regarded as highly likely that B.C. will invite Alberta to join in the development of the Anzac railway spur to tap the Sukunka coalfields.

That particular spur and the road and branch rail lines to serve it will eventually finish up close to the Alberta-B.C. border and could be used to link the Alberta side of the Elmsworth gas fields (the Deep Basin) to the deepwater port at Rupert.

Another item on Friday's agenda will involve B.C. seeking Alberta's support for its latest position on the coastal fishery.

Tuesday morning the Colonist reported that the new position taken by B.C. would be delivered to the Maritime provinces and federal authorities by Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Garde Gardom during the preliminary constitutional reform talks in Montreal.

Tuesday afternoon Gardom confirmed that the B.C. stand had been presented and later the same day Bennett, for the first time, officially outlined B.C.'s demands for administrative control of all but the international aspects of the fishery.

Wednesday in the Legislature, Graham Lea (NDP-Prince Rupert) asked Environment Minister Stephen Rogers if it was true that the government's new policy called for control of the coastal fishery.

Rogers, who appeared unaware of the policy switch earlier this week, said he couldn't comment on Lea's questions because it involved possible government policy.

Bennett also refused to answer questions on B.C.'s stand on the fishery even though he had outlined his thinking on television Tuesday evening, and, at a special cabinet meeting called Wednesday evening, had received approval for the call for provincial control.

Bennett gave no reasons for refusing to confirm in the house what he had confirmed in the media 24 hours earlier.

Women die in rush to see pope

FORTALEZA, Brazil (AP) — A throng of religious pilgrims, surging at daybreak into a soccer stadium to get good seats to see Pope John Paul, broke down a gate and trampled at least three women to death, state police said. It was a tragic replay of an incident that marred the Pope's visit to Zaire in May.

Police said many others were injured in the rush of the crowd, but could not confirm earlier reports that six persons had been trampled to death and a seventh had died of a heart attack in the panic.

The pontiff, who arrived in Fortaleza five hours later, was not immediately made aware of the extent of the tragedy. He went to the city of one million to inaugurate a country-wide Eucharistic Congress on the 10th day of a 12-day journey through Brazil, which has the world's largest Roman Catholic population.

DURING THE pope's appearance later, a man ran toward the altar, knocking down a local priest as he broke through security lines. He was subdued by 10 security guards before he could get close to the pontiff and it was not known what he had intended to do.

Thousands of people camped overnight outside the Castelao Stadium, which holds 120,000. Police said that between 4 a.m. and 5 a.m. an impatient crowd broke down an unguarded gate and crushed into the stadium, running for the best seats. That was when the tramplings occurred.

Gen. Assis Bezerra, the state public security chief, said three bodies were identified at the morgue and that "many other people" had been injured at the stadium.

But he said he had no way of knowing whether others involved in the confusion later died, because such deaths would technically be from non-suspect causes and the bodies would not go to the morgue.

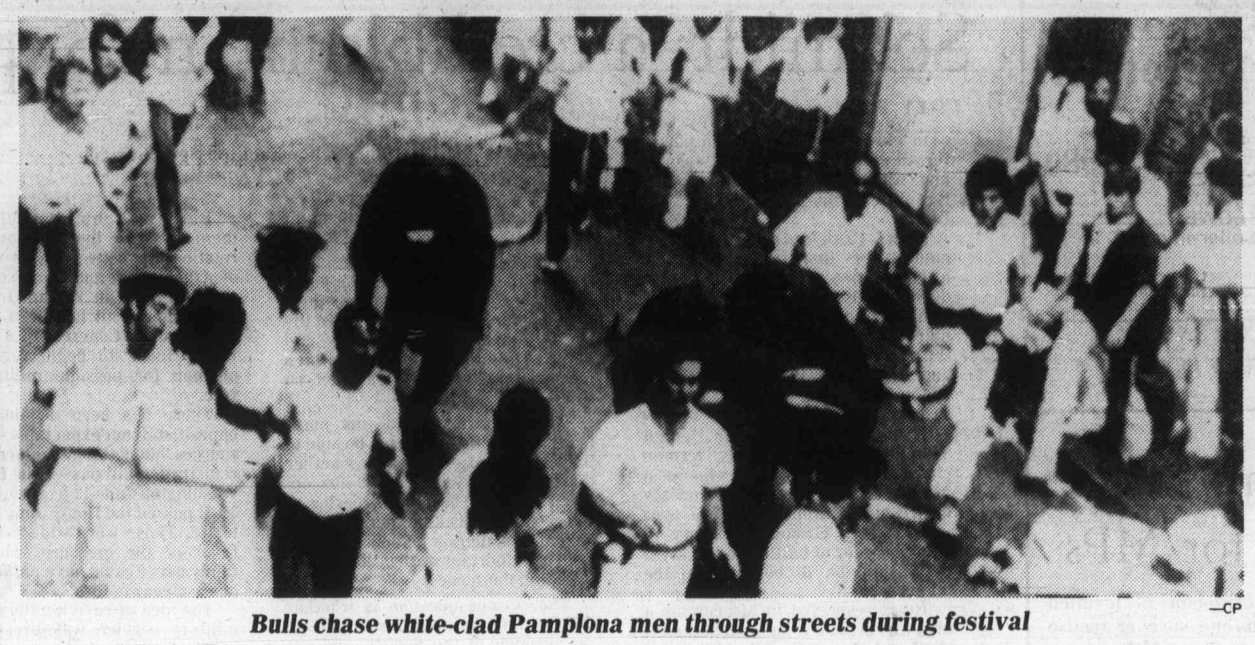

THE STATE GOVERNOR'S office had said six women were trampled to death and that another dropped dead of a heart attack upon witnessing the stadium scene.

The pope arrived in Fortaleza at about 10 a.m, only vaguely aware that something had happened. During the motorcade from the airport to the soccer field, a Vatican official told him that one person may have been crushed to death outside the stadium, an Associated Press reporter was told.

"The pope is very sensitive about these things, you know," an aide to John Paul said. "He still remembers Kinshasa."

That was a reference to the capital of the African country of Zaire, where an almost identical incident occurred during a papal visit in May. Nine people were trampled to death in a rush to get into a stadium there, and the death toll later rose to 16.

THE THEME OF the Eucharistic Congress, which the pope inaugurated later in the day and which is considered the religious highlight of the year by Brazilian Catholic leaders, was precisely these rural migrations, and the suffering and personal agony they produce.

Bulls chase white-clad Pamplona men through streets during festival

Bulls gore two men in festival

PAMPLONA, Spain (Reuter) — Two young men were badly gored in today's third running of the bulls in Pamplona's world-renowned San Fermin Festival, officials said.

The injured, both believed to be Spanish from the Pamplona area, were admitted to hospital with bull-horn injuries in the upper thigh region. Their conditions were described as serious.

Shortly after the morning bull run, described by experts as the most dangerous of the festival so far, a young Spaniard fractured his skull when he fell off a television camera platform at the entrance to the bull ring.

Israel 'plans' 85 settle ments on West Bank

JERUSALEM (Reuter) — Israeli planners have drawn up a confidential program to dramatically increase the Jewish presence in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan by establishing 85 settlements there within five years, sources in the World Zionist Organization said Wednesday.

The plan was devised by Matityahu Drobless, co-chairman of the organization's settlement department which is responsible for setting up Jewish outposts in occupied Arab territories. It was presented to the Israeli cabinet in March.

It estimates that by the end of 1985, the Jewish population of the West Bank will have grown from the present 14,000 to between 120,000 and 150,000.

Drobless's document sets out with the aid of a detailed map exactly where each of the settlements will be, and whether they will be rural or urban settlements. It also charts a road network which will be built to link the settlements.

Drobless's plan calls for an Israeli initiative to "create facts on the ground" in the light of negotiations on Palestinian autonomy among Israel, Egypt and the U.S. The talks, to be resumed next week after a two-month break, have made almost no progress in more than a year.

"We are now forced to run a race against time in the light of the autonomy negotiations," Drobless writes in his blueprint. "Now is the time for a determined and wide-ranging settlement initiative. It is important to stress, especially through deeds, that autonomy does not and shall not apply to the land but only to the Arab population."

The source close to Drobless said the cabinet had not voted on the plan and would not discuss it.

Greece shaken by three quakes

ATHENS (AP) — Three powerful earthquakes rocked eastern Greece early Wednesday, killing one person, injuring 17 and causing widespread damage.

Police said scores of houses in the area of the eastern port city of Volos collapsed and many buildings were damaged.

The Athens Seismological Bureau said the quakes took place between 5:10 a.m. and 5:37 a.m. local time. The most powerful measured 6.3 on the Richter scale.

The quakes were centred 130 kilometres northwest of Athens, the bureau said. A series of aftershocks measuring between three and five on the Richter scale were continuing.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a ten-fold increase in magnitude.

An earthquake of 3.5 on the Richter scale can cause slight damage in the local area, four moderate damage, five considerable damage, six severe damage. A seven reading is a major earthquake, capable of widespread heavy damage.

SHAH BACK TO FOOD IN DAYS

CAIRO (AP) — The dethroned shah of Iran may resume eating within a day or so, but his recovery from an abdominal infection is likely to keep him in hospital at least two more weeks, a doctor treating him said Wednesday.

"This is the second day without antibiotics," said the Egyptian physician, who requested anonymity. "His fever is normal, his morale is very good."

Iran close to electing new prime minister

Colonist wire services

TEHRAN (CP) — Iran's parliament will elect a prime minister this week or next, possibly clearing the way for debate on the future of the 53 American hostages held since Nov. 4, a Tehran newspaper reports.

The daily Enghelab Eslami says the ruling Iranian Revolutionary Council voted unanimously Tuesday in favor of having the parliament select a prime minister.

It quotes Ayatollah Mahdavi Kai, Iran's interior minister and a member of the parliamentary leadership, as saying the appointment will be made by early next week.

Revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini has said the fate of the hostages will be decided by parliament once it names a prime minister.

There were no reports Wednesday, the 249th day of captivity for the Americans, of a specific time for the hostage question to come up.

Some members of the Islamic Republican party, which holds a majority in parliament, want to try the hostages as spies. But President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr opposes this.

Mohammad Pirhusseini, senior domestic adviser to Bani-Sadr, called for reform of Iran's confused legal system.

He told a news conference that those in charge of the revolutionary courts are often unqualified and emotional. "But a judge cannot make a mistake of that importance."

As an example, he said, revolutionary authorities in Kermanshah province ordered 10 people executed but executed 11.

He cited cases of Islamic judges equipped with only high school diplomas and of a public prosecutor aged 21.

"The courts should be reorganized, cleaned up and qualified people brought in," said Pirhusseini during the sharpest attack on the courts made by a member of the presidential entourage.

Chinese, U.S. leaders discuss world issues

TOKYO (CP) — President Carter and Chinese Premier Hua Guofeng met today for talks on Afghanistan, Indochina and other world issues.

It is the first time they have met for discussions, although they briefly exchanged courtesies at a government reception Wednesday night after a memorial service for the late Japanese prime minister, Masayoshi Ohira.

The Carter-Hua talks were held at a Tokyo hotel opposite the U.S. Embassy.

Carter greeted Hua with the words: "It's good to see you again."

The two leaders sat in armchairs separated by a small table on which there were glasses of soft drinks and fruit juices.

They met privately, with only interpreters present, for a few minutes and then were joined by U.S. State Secretary Edmund Muskie, U.S. national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski and Chinese Vice-Foreign Minister Han Nianlong.

Hua told Carter that, although he had never met the president before Wednesday, he felt he knew him very well because he had seen him often on television and had read a lot about him.

Carter told Hua that meeting him today "is a very fine way to end my visit here."

Carter first became acquainted with Hua at the reception late Wednesday when the two chatted through an interpreter for about two minutes.

The president, along with 6,500 other dignitaries, including Gov.-Gen. Ed Schryer of Canada, attended a non-religious memorial service for Ohira at Tokyo's Budokan, a large martial-arts hall downtown next to the Imperial Palace.

Korea sacks 232 officials

SEOUL (AP) — South Korea's military rulers have fired 232 senior officials in the most sweeping political purge since the state was founded in 1948. Those fired represented 17 per cent of South Korea's top bureaucracy.

Fifteen officials involved in the "most flagrant cases" were seized for investigation into misconduct while in office, the special committee for national security measures said in announcing the dismissals Wednesday.

The committee, headed by military strongman Lt.-Gen. Chun Doo-hwan, handles South Korea's day-to-day affairs under martial law.

The 15 under investigation included Director-General Moon Toh-sang of the Korean Overseas Information Service, Deputy Transportation Minister Kim Wan-Soo, Director-General Lee Kun-choong of the office of supply, and Lee Chong-shik, national railway director-general.

Also among the purged, official sources said, were Commerce and Industry Minister Chung Jai-suk, three provincial governors, three provincial educational superintendents-general, and 32 officials of vice-ministerial rank.

The committee said the governors, educational superintendents and vice-ministers were charged with abuse of power for personal interest, negligence of duties, or lack of discipline, among other things.

It said that the primary purpose of the purge was to set the proper pace in carrying out the government's promised "social-purification" campaign by cleansing the government hierarchy of corrupt officials.

The only way to fly — for MPs

No matter what criticism is levelled against Canada's MPs, no one can ever accuse them of under-valuing their services, false modesty or lack of self-esteem. On the contrary, our elected representatives in Ottawa seem to be charmingly candid in acknowledging — in every way possible way — that they are special people deserving of the best.

All things considered, they have managed fairly well over the years to elevate themselves to a station in life which matches this perception. With the possible exception of air travel. Until now, you see, the poor wretches have had to make do with the plebeian surroundings, cramped knee-room, bawling infants and other indignities of economy class. Just like any other Canadian peasant.

Fortunately, however, this injustice has been corrected. George St. Jacques, director of personnel and administration for the House of Commons, confirmed this week that MPs may now travel first-class when using their 52 free flights a year. And, of course, the same first-class privileges apply to the six free flights a year to Ottawa which were formerly restricted to politicians' spouses but are now — since the successful battle of Vancouver Centre MP Pat Carney — available to "designated next of kin."

The cost is estimated at $360,000 a year, on top of the present $2 million bill for MPs' air travel. A mere bagatelle, when one considers that federal spending this year will total about $60 billion-plus, and the deficit a modest $14 billion.

Only the skinflints among us will question why an MP should not travel economy, and only the most churlish will ask why, indeed, he needs 52 free flights a year to visit his constituents. Outdoing all such scrooges for sheer misery of outlook is the person who calculates that 52 first-class trips a year from Ottawa to Vancouver — at $400 a shot — comes to $20,800, and that this sum in addition to MPs' present indexed salary of $44,100 makes them very high-priced help.

After all, if our Ottawa representatives can enjoy such perks as free tailor and barbershops, suites of three or four offices each, two linen-and-fine-china restaurants, four cafeterias, their own private bus service and four free bulk mailings a year, isn't it only fair and reasonable that they should fly first-class?

The aforementioned Mr. St. Jacques had the best explanation for this move. "Some members," he said, "particularly those who travel long distances, felt they should be permitted to fly first-class because of the superior accommodations."

Well, naturally.

Heroic delusions

Why is that so many great athletes and entertainers never know when to quit? Long after they should have retired gracefully from the spotlight they continue trying to hog it, often producing nothing more than a grotesque parody of their former skills and talents.

When the late Gracie Fields in her declining years tried to hit the top notes she had scaled with such ease in her youth, it was agonizing for her and embarrassing for her fans. Frank Sinatra's famed vocal chords today seem more than a mite rough around the edges. Now, heaven help us, Muhammad Ali — a flabby and out of shape 38 — is trying to stage a September comeback to fight Larry Holmes for one version of the world heavyweight championship.

The superb boxer who used to, in his much-quoted boast, "float like a butterfly and sting like a bee," will probably persist in his youth-chasing delusions until he goes down and out like a stricken whale.

It's sad. If only they'd let us remember them as they used to be . . .

COMMENT/BACKGROUND

Schmidt: a credible man for peace mission

Joseph Harsch
Christian Science Monitor News Service

WASHINGTON — The West German chancellor went to Moscow a few days ago with the most earnest and serious task of these times to perform.

That task was nothing less than to attempt to stem the decline in East-West relations before the nations have passed the point of no return and find themselves sliding into a real disaster.

Events have cast one man, Helmut Schmidt, for that role. As German chancellor he presides over the most prosperous and productive economy in Western Europe, and also over the largest European army in NATO's order of battle. He is trusted in Washington to be loyal to the alliance.

He is respected in Moscow as a man who genuinely has sought to ease tensions between East and West and whose country has a powerful interest in regaining that easier relationship of days past that was called "detente."

He arrived in Moscow with one important additional advantage. He had just succeeded at the Western summit meeting in Venice in toning down and calming down the Carter administration's Afghan policy. And everyone knew Schmidt was the man most responsible for the change.

Thus the German chancellor could say to the Soviets that it now is their turn to calm down and tone down the words and actions of the day and permit a breathing spell during which tensions might at the least get no worse.

We on the outside do not know today and probably will not be able to judge for weeks or months whether this peace-making mission has enjoyed success. The public speeches at a meeting of this kind and at such a delicate moment in history mean little. The important work is done quietly behind the scenes.

The serious question is whether the German chancellor was able to get through to the Soviets and get them to realize that their invasion of Afghanistan has set in motion in the rest of the world a trend that in the end can do them much damage and harm.

The Soviet leaders at the Kremlin in Moscow are sensitive to what others do to them, but often show little awareness of how their actions affect and influence others.

Perhaps Schmidt could bring them to realize the cause and effect relationship between their invasion of Afghanistan and some surprising recent events in Washington. Most surprising of all has been the passage through Congress of a bill providing funds to begin registration of men for possible military service.

There has been a minor vocal opposition from expectable left-wing sources, but nothing spectacular. The registration bill passed the Senate in Washington June 12 by a vote of 58 to 34. It passed the House June 25 by 234 to 168. Those were wide margins in favor of the measure, which certainly never could have passed either house a year before.

The idea of reviving the draft for military service was presumed in politcial circles to be so unpopular that the leading Republican candidates all opposed it during the recent presidential primaries. The record shows candidate Ronald Reagan still opposed to it. And yet, when the House gave decisive approval to registration, there was so little general attention that you had to search the inside pages of most newspapers to find it.

The unthinkable idea of reviving the draft has become thinkable in the wake of the invasion of Afghanistan. Most Americans seem to have accepted the idea that that time has come to look to their arms.

Think how different things would be today had the Soviets resisted the temptation to send Cuban troops into Angola and Ethiopia, and then send their own troops into Afghanistan.

The first two deeds sent warning signals through the U.S. body politic. They provided ammunition to the publicists and pamphleteers on the hawk side. They prepared the soil. But they were not decisive.

But the invasion of Afghanistan did move the U.S. decisively. Congress has not only prepared the ground for reviving the draft, but also is ready to give Carter any funds he asks for refurbishing the arsenals. They may even give him more than he asks. The Americans have been jolted into a rearming mood.

Schmidt undoubtedly has done his best in Moscow to get the Soviet leaders to realize that this is something they have done. If they are made uneasy by it, they have only themselves to blame. The American giant slipped into a soporific mood after Vietnam. If the Soviets had remained quiet and passive, that somnolent mood might have lasted a long time, certainly well beyond today.

Sudan trying to handle mounting refugee roll

Alistair Matheson

KHARTOUM — Sudan has failed to get the $50 million it urgently requested from the world community to help it cope with 500,000 refugees sheltering in the hinterland from upheavals in neighboring countries.

Few substantial pledges came from the 27 governments represented at an almost-unnoticed three-day conference last month in Khartoum on the refugee crisis in the Horn of Africa.

The Sudanese have failed repeatedly to secure the voluntary repatriation of the majority of the refugees. Some will remain within its borders for many years; others may have to be absorbed into Sudanese society.

Sudan has refused to turn back anyone from neighboring states seeking asylum. Consequently it now has fugitives from the fighting in Ethiopia, Uganda and Chad. The financial burden is intolerable.

The Khartoum conference in late June was attended by representatives of several Arab states and Arab banking institutions, as well as by relief workers from 58 international voluntary agencies.

Some of the relief organizations felt that the Sudan's failure to reach the hoped-for aid target of $50 million was partly due to the government's own reluctance to spell out the main cause of the refugee influx.

Only once during the discussions was any reference made to the savage war being waged against secessionists by the Ethiopian army: The governor of Sudan's Kassala province said guardedly that the steady trickle of Ethiopian refugees "grew into a flood" in 1975, leaving listeners to recall for themselves this was the year after the revolution in Ethiopia.

Aware of the recent improvement in relations between the Sudan and Ethiopia, most delegates tactfully avoided the awkward issue. Even on the subject of Ugandan refugees, they refrained from political remarks.

This did not deter Libya's ambassador, Wahab el Zintani, from launching a bitter attack on the British delegate, Foreign Office Minister Neil Marten, for referring to Afghanistan and "communist barbarism" in Asia.

The Libyan ambassador demanded: "Who is the British minister to talk about barbarism? What about . . . the fact that the Palestinian refugees have suffered longer and in larger numbers than any other refugees?"

Realizing he was out of order in a conference on Sudan refugees, he left it at that and said Libya's Council of Ministers was considering what help Libya could give to the Sudan.

The United States delegate dashed Sudanese hopes for immediate aid from Washington when he said his government felt any assistance should be channelled through the United Nations.

For the voluntary agencies the conference provided a real breakthrough, however, with the Sudanese authorities at last agreeing that foreign relief workers can operate directly in the refugee settlements. Until now they have been unable to assist, other than through Sudan's Commissioner for Refugees.

Some relief workers said the main problem is that many Sudanese are the suffering more than the refugees, especially in the southern provinces.

One worker, just returned from eastern Equatoria, where famine is as bad as in Uganda's Karamoja, said: "Things are really desperate there and whole communities face starvation. They are also suffering from highly contagious diseases, yet nothing can be done because they are too remote from government medical facilities."

U.S., Bonn bound together in turbulent marriage

David Binder

WASHINGTON — Periodically over the last three years acrimony has boiled up in relations between the United States and its most important ally, West Germany, over issues of arms control, economic policy, nuclear exports and, most recently, over basic perceptions of East-West relations.

As in a long marriage, to which the 30-year-old Bonn-Washington relationship has sometimes been compared, the quarrels have always been patched up.

So it was again after Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's meetings in Moscow with Leonid Brezhnev, the Soviet leader, an action initially viewed by the Carter administration as not being in harmony with its own policy toward the Soviet Union since the December 1979 intervention in Afghanistan.

The latest patching-up occurred when Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher told Carter that West German initiative had extracted a Soviet concession on future discussions with the West of the strategic arms balance in Europe. The president voiced his "admiration."

However exaggerated some of the recent disputes may have seemed and however much they may have derived, as many believe, from temperamental differences between Schmidt and Carter, there have been some more enduring changes over the last dozen years in the Bonn-Washington relationship.

They have arisen in part out of a growing West German awareness of a national self-interest and in part from Washington's occasional inability to persuade Bonn that American policies were always right.

The most evident changes are in Bonn's emergence from relative political isolation and the loss of feeling like a client of the United States. The loss of that status is symbolized by the termination of Bonn's payment of funds to compensate for the cost of stationing American troops in West Germany in the early 1970s and the ascendancy of the West German mark.

But it was the normalization treaties with the Soviet Union and its allies that provided West Germany with the flexibility it had been denied.

The fact that West Germany had already established itself as the dominant economic power within the Common Market served to strengthen its freedom of action.

The short ups and long downs of the Soviet-American relationship since President Richard Nixon concluded his wide-ranging arms agreements in 1972 with Brezhnev have tended to highlight the divergency in views between Bonn and Washington on the central issue of how to deal with the Soviet Union.

For Washington, particularly under President Carter, the relationship with Moscow has been treated almost as a faucet that could be turned off or on. For Bonn, in the decade of its treaty ties, the relationship with Moscow has become a permanent aspect of its foreign relations, augmented by sizable trade and other exchanges, including the repatriation of hundreds of thousands of ethnic Germans from Eastern Europe.

These divergencies in perspective derive quite naturally from differences of size and location as well as from history. Like them or not, Germans know that the Russians are near neighbors. Most Americans do not feel that about the Russians.

The differences in perspective, along with West Germany's relative growth in power and America's relative decline in influence, were embodied for an instant in Genscher's flying visit to Paris and Washington to brief French and American leaders on the details of the Schmidt-Brezhnev meetings.

One reason why elements of distrust will probably persist is that despite all the telephone and letter exchanges that continue between Schmidt and Carter, and despite the steady stream of West German officials visiting Washington, there has been a general decline in interest on the part of Americans in West German affairs during the last six years.

But moments of distrust or not, and despite the quarrels, the Bonn-Washington marriage seems likely to continue indefinitely without the help of counselling or the pressure of in-laws, simply because the two partners depend so heavily on each other for security.

Ethiopian aid pleas fall on war-weary ears

Avon Priestly

ADDIS ABABA — The Soviet-backed Ethiopian government is appealing for a big increase in emergency supplies to help save its people from the effects of war and drought in the south-western part of the country, including the Ogaden.

According to Ethiopia, Somali forces have stepped up attacks across the Ogaden border. Certainly the drought is approaching the disaster level of 1973.

The head of Ethiopia's Relief and Rehabilitation Committee, Shimelis Adugna, said: "We are working under very difficult conditions. There is a big security problem in the area."

He claimed Somali guerrillas were attacking government buildings and abducting people. Their main targets were schools, health centres and agricultural development programs.

When I visited the Ogaden I was told by an Ethiopian relief official in Dire Dawa that trucks were not getting through with emergency supplies because of repeated ambushes by Somali forces.

The last convoy to reach Dire Dawa took two weeks to travel 180 miles and had to be escorted by an Ethiopian force of battalion strength.

Supplies usually have to be flown to the seven resettlement camps in the region. Only one aircraft is available, a DC-3 with a load limit of two tons.

Each camp holds up to 10,000 people. They need food and drugs to fight advanced malnutrition, TB and malaria. In one camp I visited, a three-month-old girl had died that morning because there was no baby food.

"I am asking for 38,000 tons of milk powder and other high-protein foods. We don't even have offers of 3,000 tons as of now," Shimelis said.

A top-level United Nations mission has just completed a tour of the region and its recommendations for aid were published in Geneva. According to Ethiopia the recommendations fall far short of the country's needs.

The mission recommended 150,000 tonnes of cereals; Ethiopia had asked for nearly three times that much. A demand for 240 trucks and pick-ups had been reduced to about 50, although the UN had recommended the supply of three more aircraft.

Gorde Hunter

One man's opinion

We had members of the legislative assembly throwing crisp left jabs and countering right crosses and, as is the case once every three years, we also had the politicos screaming for a clean-up of the mug's game of boxing. Local politicians first.

Gordon Hanson, MLA, Victoria, threw his left jab at the quality of food served aboard our ferry system. Came out as unappetizing junk the way I read it, which doesn't really put Gordon in the exclusive critics circle. Seems to me I've heard these allegations before and on occasion, I'm not too sure I didn't voice them myself. On the other hand and to be perfectly fair to the chefs, I've also had some reasonably good meals aboard our highway links. On a scale of one to ten, probably a five.

Then we heard from Omineca where Jack Kempf holds forth as the resident representative. Jack said that if the food is so bad, why not eliminate it and serve booze instead. Hinted it might bring a larger profit to the ferry system anyway.

Good old Jack is now arranging a dental appointment to remove one large foot from one mouth. His suggestion must be ranked right up there with legalizing pot and the unilateral patriation of our constitution by Pierre. No question about the profit factor—would be considerably higher from the dispensing of booze than from the serving of food.

THE MAJOR ARGUMENT against has been trotted out by friend and foe alike. We have enough marginal drivers cluttering our highways now without adding to the carnage by plying them with the grape aboard short ferry trips. I can just see some of those yahoos and their over-powered machines roaring down the Pat Bay Highway now. We could change the name to Pat Bay 500.

No, if the food aboard isn't all that good, don't replace it with alcoholic beverages. Get rid of it and don't replace it period. I've run off at the typewriter before about the rather idiotic idea of serving full course meals on a trip that takes one and a half hours from jetty to jetty. It hardly seems possible we've become such food addicts as to need a fix on a short run.

Do as they do on the Washington state ferry system—have food dispensers lined up against a wall. Would save some space and certainly cut the costs of the corporation by a significant amount. Might even whittle ferry fares by a dime or two. We have no real need of cafeteria or dining room service, same as we have no need of bar service either.

MEANWHILE, A DOWN EAST boxer dies as a result of getting his brains scrambled in a recent pugilistic endeavor and all of a sudden the hue and cry goes up to for greater safety measures inside the squared circle. It is not out of the realm of possibility a blue ribbon commission will be appointed to study the whole issue of boxing safety. Will cost a few thousand bucks, the report will be duly submitted, possibly read and then put into storage with the other reports of a similar nature garnered during the past 30 years.

A Dave Johnson, who was appointed by the Canadian Boxing Association to review medical examination rules governing the sport, has said he will recommend that boxers undergo pre-fight electrocardiograms, electroencephalograms and brain x-rays. Sounds all very noble, but rest assured it will be of temporary nature—boxing won't allow itself to be cluttered by such high-falutin' medical procedures for very long.

Let us be not be naive about the whole thing. Boxing is a mug's game with no basic redeeming feature. It is the only sport in which the whole idea is to deliberately injure your opponent. Knock him senseless is the ultimate goal and every time a man is knocked out he suffers a concussion, which means at least minute brain damage. Too many of these knockouts, the brain turns to mush and the once marvelous athlete becomes a shambling, stumbling shell constantly answering imaginary bells for yet another round.

There can be no safety in boxing as long as the fighter's head remains unprotected from sledgehammer blows by rock-like fists encased in thin layers of padding. All the pre-fight medical exams in the world can't save a fighter once he's in that ring. The only safety measure he has is not to get hit, which, you understand, isn't the easiest task even for a skilled Muhammed Ali.

There have been five ring deaths this year and there will be more in the future, but ring deaths are only part of the gory statistical report. There are no records kept re the number of punch-drunk hulks who live out the rest of their days in a twilight zone, a haze, a stupor.

No, not a sport.

Guarding Canada

Having watched the performance of the premier of this province and the stampede leader, Peter Lougheed, made me conclude that we in the West should not expect to see democracy at work, like in Quebec.

They are not the type of leaders the two provinces deserve.

Since our intellectuals, no matter how often it is repeated in our national anthem, are not on guard, an illiterate has to stick his neck out.

JOHN STROEK,

CBC could learn from Funfest show

I watched the CBC Canada Birthday television debacle for about 15 minutes and then could not take any more of the nonsense. I have never seen (and hope I never will) such an uninteresting and stupid program put on by such overpaid people with absolutely no idea of what is entertaining to the Canadian public.

This leads me to express my sincere thanks to all those responsible for putting on such a marvellous show as Funfest, which I must say was more professional than amateur. Maybe the CBC people should be invited to watch this show in 1981, to get some idea of how to run a show which Canadians appreciate.

Perhaps I should not make reference to any one group or any one individual taking part in Funfest but even when groups and individuals taking part performed to the professional level I must say that the Ukrainian dancers stole the show (as they always do). They certainly put on a marvellous show.

The entire show made us very proud to be Canadians, with so many cultures being happy to entertain their fellow Canadians.

JOHN P. WYSEMAN,
917 Stafford St.,
Victoria.

Replica of bastion format for centre

May I express a very deep concern re a convention complex for our harbor.

A statement issued that persons did not attend meetings or show their displeasure is only too true, but at the same time one ponders the fact that in the last few years councils paid little if any attention to the wishes of the public.

Let us make known our wishes to renew some remnant of the real Victorian charm and character which so many return visitors now find sadly diminishing.

An excellent format for this property would be a replica to scale of the Fort Victoria Bastion, complemented by a parklike setting which would in turn be enhanced by the Empress Hotel and the Parliament Buildings.

Promoters of a convention centre are only interested in the return on their money, not your wish or mine.

Cults frustrate search for truth

I'm only a California visitor here but I want to take a moment to say "super" on your editorial Throwing light on the cults in June 20 Colonist.

I sure wish someone had stopped it all before California went mad with it. All the Werner Erharts and Moonies etc. have ruined man's faith in the true God and Father and Creator. All they have added is more confusion and fear.

Thank God for Daniel Hill and others like him.

I have so many lost friends out there in the desert of search, bouncing from one cult to another. Each day a new cult appears; enough to frustrate any sincere searcher of truth.

I have been through many and am finally at peace with Jesus—and the search has ended. All these others truly were fraudulent and impersonal.

God bless you for this article—I pray you will continue to see how important this issue is.

Socred's plan for ferry bar lacked rationale

On Friday, July 4, I switched on the radio to listen to the CBC's Radio-Noon program. An interview was in progress between Ann Mitchell and, as I did not hear the beginning of the interview, an unidentified male guest. The subject was regarding the ferries between Vancouver Island and Vancouver.

Kempf
. . . bars for buffet

The interviewee was quite strongly advocating that the buffet meals on the ferries be discontinued and replaced by bars. For a moment I thought perhaps I had tuned in on a comedy program. As the interview continued I listened for some rationale from this fellow, but none came. As he spoke I envisioned many car drivers sloshing down as many beers as they could as the ferry progressed through our beautiful Gulf islands and Active Pass and, when the call came to disembark, jumping into their cars and driving off the ferry before it had docked.

At the end of the interview the name of the guest on the program was announced. None other than Socred MLA Jack Kempf. I could see poor old Wacky turning over.

Developers threaten Mill Bay's water

In the Mill Bay Post Office is a box, placed there for petitions to the local water board. Consumers are concerned and agitated about their water. It stains badly. Its coliform count is high. It tastes horrible.

In Cordova Bay large-scale development has put the entire community at risk of disease outbreak. Your paper reports that children are presently playing in pools of untreated sewage from septic tanks. An outbreak of hepatitis occurred some years ago in Happy Valley, and there are yet many residents who suffer from the effects of this debilitating disease.

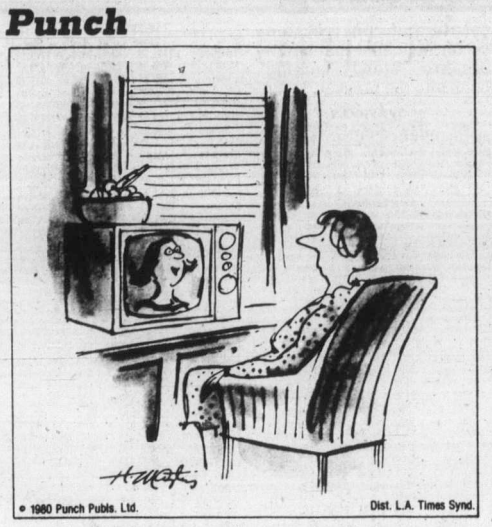

Mill Bay residents who draw water from the community supply or from their own wells should be aware that the 250-home subdivision—now at forth reading—will put their water at considerble risk of both contamination and depletion. The flood of effluent from 250 septic tanks plus that from a school and other buildings cannot help but seep down into Mill Bay water supplies.

Why have subdivision plans been allowed to proceed as far as they have? You must ask yourselves if you are prepared—ultimately—to pay for another water supply system plus a sewage disposal plant of high sophistication to make the subdivision practical. You will then be supporting the developer.

Why is the Cowichan Valley Regional District allowing this threat to your water? Why should you have to pay, in the end, for sewage disposal from homes yet to be built? Why should you be faced with the situation which threatens Cordova Bay?

"As you know this is the last show of the series. Since we have not been renewed for next year we thought we'd gather the cast and just tell you a little about ourselves, our plans for the future, who gets along with whom, who smokes pot, who has a drinking problem, who's sleeping with whom . . . "

Air of collusion in premiers' meet

There's a definite "aroma" of collusion in the coming of Premier Lougheed and his Alberta cabinet to a meeting with British Columbia's Premier Bennett and his cabinet.

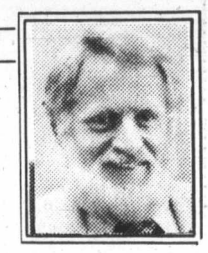

An air of connivance pervades the situation and this aura has possibilities of weakening Canadian unity at a time when the federal house is solidly pursuing a strong policy towards provincial unity in the "Canadian" sense.

Will Premier Bennett please stand up and be counted?

So Gordon Hanson doesn't like the food on the ferries.

The food, said the New Democratic Party MLA for Victoria and self-appointed gastronomy critic, is terrible.

Far from being intimidated by Hanson's verdict, government backbencher Jack Kempf, MLA for Omineca, went into the offensive. Food service, said he, should be scrapped because there is no money in it. Booze should be sold instead.

Which goes to show that political grandstanding can always be outdone by foolishness.

First to Hanson and his Lucullian lament. I must be taking different ferries when I go to Vancouver because I've never found the food bad.

Of course, the menu isn't a gourmet's dream, but it's not bad either. Breakfast is comparable to the fare served in any restaurant. The hamburgers are as good as you can make them in such a hurry for so many people. The clam chowder, I'm told, is excellent (I'm not a seafood fan) and the buffet is outstanding.

BUT MORE IMPORTANT, the service leaves nothing to be desired. The staff is friendly and courteous. Grace McCarthy probably gets high on those smiles every time she takes the ferry.

Just why Hanson chose to badmouth the food on the ferries I don't know. Perhaps he's just falling in with the hordes of people who have nothing better to do than complain about the ferries.

I often wonder how the ferries' personnel feels about that. Eventually, I suppose, they'll get so fed up with the constant criticism that they'll forget about courtesy and friendliness.

Meanwhile, I advise Hanson to eat before he boards the ferry, because the cooks don't like him either.

Two runny eggs with burnt toast, please, for the honorable member from Victoria.

THE HONORABLE MEMBER from Omineca is a different case. He should think again before he offers any further comments on replacing food service with alcoholic beverages.

To serve alcohol to motorists during a 90-minute ferry trip would be lunacy. It goes against everything the government has been trying to do in its battle against drunk driving.

The majority of passengers would probably have no more than one or two glasses of wine or bottles of beer, but there will be those who manage to consume enough alcohol to make them potential execution squads by the time the ferry reaches the other side of the strait.

BOTH HANSON AND KEMPF should leave well enough alone. A trip aboard a B.C. Ferries vessel is still a treat, fare increases notwithstanding.

Where else can you take a 90-minute cruise through some of the most breathtaking scenery in the world, while eating a meal that may not live up to Gordon Hanson's exacting standards, but is more than acceptable to hundreds of thousands of tourists using the ferry system every year?

I think it's about time the public found another whipping boy. B.C. Ferries has been knocked about a little too often.

Maybe next time you take the ferry to Vancouver, you might consider a friendly smile or an appreciative word for the staff.

I think they deserve it.

Hospital team thanked

Recently my family and I had a visitor from Scotland who had to be taken to the emergency department at Victoria General Hospital.

The promptness with which the ambulance responded to our call, the extreme care and gentleness of the ambulance men to the patient, we shall never forget.

Also, we cannot speak too highly of the professional attention of the emergency staff, and particularly the attending physician at the Victoria General Hospital.

We shall always be grateful.

Drink for thought?

I was especially interested in your article re the hepatitis scare due to raw sewage stagnating in many parts of Cordova Bay, because just a few hours previous to reading the article I had read this account of a similar problem in Old Testament times (from 2 Kings 2: 19-23): Some men from Jerico went to Elisha and said, "As you know, sir, this is a fine city, but the water is bad, and causes miscarriages."

"Put some salt in a new bowl and bring it to me," he ordered. They brought it to him, and he went to the spring, threw the salt in the water and said, "This is what the Lord says, 'I make the water pure, and it will not cause any more deaths or miscarriages.' " And that water has been pure ever since, just as Elisha said it would.

Toronto trading

TORONTO (CP) — The Toronto stock market ended a five-session advance with a mixed close Wednesday after an attempted rally in New York fizzled out.

Analysts said the Dow Jones industrial average in New York seemed unable to crack the 900 level, viewed as a psychological turning point in the market.

The index doubled back after recording moderate gains earlier in the session to finish down .08 points at 897.27.

Harry Rannala, an analyst with Walwyn, Stodgell, Cochran Murray Ltd., said bullish activity in the real estate and construction sector indicated that builders are "slowly coming back into the market."

MARKET REPORT

Closing quotations for Wed. July 9, 1980

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was mixed Wednesday, coming up short for the second time in as many days in its efforts to break the 900 barrier in the Dow Jones industrial average.

As the showdown at that round-number milepost continued, trading volume accelerated to its heaviest pace in more than three months.

Wednesday's volume was the largest turnover since a 63.68 million-share day on March 27, when a financial showdown involving the Hunt family of Dallas reached a climax in what came to be known as "Silver Thursday" on Wall Street.

The last time the Dow closed above 900 was Feb. 13 of this year, when it finished at an 18-month high of 903.84.

Twice during Tuesday's session it edged up to within a fraction of that level. Both advances ran into stiff resistance from selling by investors who have come to see it as the upper limit of a trading range in which the market has fluctuated for much of the past few years.

On Wednesday the market made an even stronger bid. But once again sellers took charge.

The NYSE's composite index rose 0.09 to67.46.

High rail bill imperils coal deal

'If Canada doesn't want in, Australia does'

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C. (CP) — High railway freight rates will be to blame if negotiations with Japan for sale of northeast British Columbia coal fall through, says Graham Kedgley, the provincial government's coal co-ordinator.

Railways should be willing to subsidize freight rates during the first years of the project as was done when mines were opened in southeastern B.C., he said.

Freight rates proposed by the federally-owned Canadian National Railways and provincially-owned B.C. Railway for transport of coal from proposed mines northeast of Prince George to a new terminal in Prince Rupert are considerably higher than the 2.14 cents a tonne-mile rates in effect in southern B.C., Kedgley said.

The southeastern coal is transported to the Roberts Bank coal port near Vancouver by the privately-owned CP Rail.

He told the local chamber of commerce Tuesday transport costs account for 25 per cent of the sale price, up six per cent from five years ago and buyers, like the Japanese, foresee the day when transport will account for 50 per cent of the costs.

The coal co-ordinator declined to disclose the freight rates used in formulating a pricing package taken to Japan in June, but said the coal companies involved in the talks likely will appeal to the taxpayer-owned railways for a reduction in the rates.

He said Japan is willing to pay a premium for northern B.C. coal because of its high quality and because it recognizes the cost of development, but "Japan is not a benevolent society."

"If we in Canada don't want in then Australia does," said the Australian-born Kedgley, adding that Australian coal already is $10 less a tonne than southern B.C. coal.

But Kedgeley said he is optimistic about the coal negotiations and predicted a deal will be struck by September or October. The timing of the agreement is crucial to the coal companies who need go-ahead this fall in order to develop properties by 1984, he said.

He said the federal government's $250 million commitment to coal development announced last week is considerably less than it appears on the surface, and the $39 million contribution for coal terminal site preparation and services on Ridley Island is the only part of the package specifically aimed at coal development.

The $122 million for improving the CNR main line into Prince Rupert, as well as $90 million to purchase additional train sets, are essential to maintenance and development of the port as a whole, he said.

Even the $39 million for coal terminal services is high, he added.

As a former president of Neptune Terminals, the company which conducted a series of feasibility studies on a coal terminal at Ridley Island in the mid-1970s, Kedgley said he was surprised to learn $39 million would be needed for coal site servicing in addition to the $42.5 million pledge for grain terminal support services.

Stocking up with Ladas

By Pierre Roberge

MONTREAL (CP) — The growing popularity of the Soviet-built Lada car on the Canadian market doesn't seem to have provoked much reaction from North American carmakers.

About 10,000 of the cars have found Canadian buyers since 1978, and sales are picking up. The total is almost insignificant when compared to sales by the United States' Big Three, but it surely can't help an economic sector hit by layoffs and factory closings.

Paulette Charbonneau of the public relations department of General Motors of Canada Ltd. said the Lada "has not yet proved itself in winter" and could face problems with replacement parts.

GM hardly feels threatened, she added.

Chrysler Canada spokesman Gordon Pfeifer said Lada isn't hurting his company, even though it remains in serious difficulty.

"They're making a lot of noise but not many sales," he said.

And Michel Messie of Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. said Ford has "no reaction" to the invasion of the Lada.

The Lada looks similar to the Fiat 124, a model Fiat produced until 1974, but it is about 100 kilograms heavier and somewhat more solid. It now is built and assembled in the town of Togliatti, on the banks of the Volga River, in a plant built by Fiat for the Soviet government.

Michel Dubois, a Montreal Lada dealer, said shipping and other costs have to be added to the basic selling price of $4,288 in Halifax, where the cars arrive by ship. But even with taxes the price is still just $4,901—less than half what it sells for in the USSR.

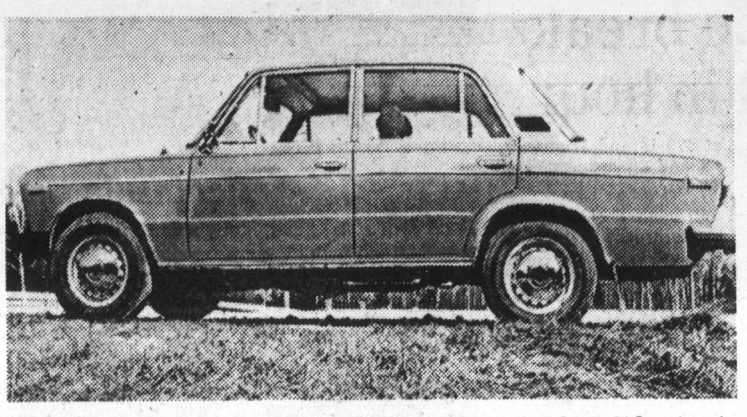

But doesn't selling a car overseas at half its domestic price constitute dumping? Lada official John Wright said there aren't enough Ladas sold in Canada for North American carmakers to suffer.

Don McEwen of the federal department of industry, trade and commerce, said the Anti-Dumping Tribunal has received no complaints concerning the Lada.

Moreover, with Soviet taxes, the car could be sold more cheaply in other countries without necessarily dumping it.

There is speculation Lada sales in Canada have been hurt by reaction to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, even though Canadian trade sanctions against the USSR don't cover automotive products.

"Trade works both ways," McEwen said, adding that any boycott of Soviet goods could hurt sales of Canadian products in the USSR and could set back a proposal to assemble Soviet four-wheel drive vehicles in Canada.

Russian-built Lada retails at $4,901 but invasion hasn't hurt yet

It's good news for small mine firms

Changes in the Mineral Resource Tax Act will permit a small mining company to make $50,000 a year before paying resources taxes, Energy Minister Robert McClelland said Wednesday.

The change is one of half a dozen contained in amendments to existing legislation and designed, McClelland said, "to improve terms for further processing of British Columbia's mineral resources."

Under existing legislation the small mining company can make up to $25,000 a year before paying resource taxes.

The amendments to the act were given first reading in the Legislature Wednesday.

"We have the resources, the skilled manpower, the technology and now the leadership from government to derive maximum benefit from our resources," McClelland said. "This is a positive step by the government to remove tax barriers to encourage further processing of B.C. mineral resources within the province."

Other amendments to the act provide for a new processing allowance base of eight per cent of the original capital cost of processing assets. The existing allowance is based on the residual or unclaimed depreciation on those assets.

At present the minimum allowance for tax recognition is 154 per cent of taxable income with a maximum of 50 per cent for mines which undertake milling and concentrating. For mines which further process the concentrates the maximum will now be increased by up to an additional 20 percentage points.

Other amendments provide for a faster rate of write-off of development and pre-development costs associated with a mine.

REBATE CLAIM WINS PROBE

OTTAWA (CP) — Consumer Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet said Wednesday that department investigators will examine complaints that the Hudson's Bay and Robert Simpson companies have tried to force textile manufacturers to give them special rebates.

But he indicated to reporters on Parliament Hill that this probe by combines investigation branch experts will not be a formal one.

The issue was raised Tuesday when the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute announced it had sent letters to Ouellet and Prime Minister Trudeau outlining how the companies were demanding rebates of up to three per cent because they bought large quantities from garment manufacturers.

Ouellet said his department also has received representations from manufacturers of other products about this practice by the two companies which merged in 1978.

Americans trim loans

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — Americans cut their borrowing by a record amount this May due mainly to the recession and the government's credit controls, the Federal Reserve Board said Wednesday.

Outstanding credit plunged by about $3.5 billion after dropping about $2 billion in April, and now is falling at a 13-per-cent annual rate.

Secret payoff alleged

VANCOUVER (CP) — Cyril Lloyd Keetch, a former vice-president of Woodward's Stores, has been charged with accepting secret payments of $26,000 in return for showing favoritism in stocking food floors.

Named in the charge was Robin Smith Food Packs Ltd., an English company which supplies specialty imported foods.

Keetch was committed a year ago for county court trial on five counts of receiving secret commissions and one count of fraud involving about $87,000.

Water knocks out 1,000 phone lines

About 1,000 telephone lines in the Finlayson-Douglas-Burnside area on the Victoria-Saanich border were knocked out Wednesday afternoon by water seepage which got into telephone cables on Blanshard Street just north of Caledonia.

Don Patterson, B.C. Telephone Co. information officer in Victoria, said service to the business and residential telephones began deteriorating in the early afternoon.

Crews were called in and lines were being gradually restored.

Patterson said complete service should be restored by noon today.

Waterline break repaired in hour

The break in one of three main water lines feeding Greater Victoria from the Sooke Lakes watershed took about an hour to repair early Wednesday morning.

Commissioner Ron Upward of the Greater Victoria Water District said it was not necessary to drain the line, which normally feeds about 160 million litres to users daily.

The break occurred about 10 a.m. Tuesday when a power shovel accidentally broke off a 32-millimetre valve right outside the water district's office at 479 Island Highway, sending up a spectacular gusher.

Officials decided it was too hazardous to traffic to attempt to make repairs during the day and began work at midnight.

Upward said the water loss was about 2,250 litres a minute, or only two per cent of the line's capacity. The total water loss was about 2 million litres over a 15-hour period. The line pumps water through at the rate of 1.6 billion litres a day.

Cars on show Sunday

Royal Oak Concours 80, a car show for classic, vintage and exotic cars, will be held from noon to 5 p.m. Sunday.

The show will be held in the main parking lot of the Royal Oak Inn, and if it rains will be moved to the covered parking lot at Mayfair.

Trophies will be awarded for originality and cleanliness and entries are still open.

Concours 80 is a non-profit show organized by Speedline Imports and sponsored by various businesses.

Entry details are available from Speedline Imports at 382-2123.

Peninsula road loses wall of fir

Stark landscape along Stelly's Cross Road in Central Saanich caught some residents unaware this week, as only those in immediate vicinity were notified by the municipality that about 30 roadside fir trees were coming down. Trees were cut to accommodate B.C. Telephone Co.'s underground wiring, and to widen road for pedestrian pathway. Most trees were about 20 to 30 years old, and some had been growing to one side because of regular pruning to allow room for nearby B.C. Hydro lines.

Provincial Court

Judge Blake Allan handed out a 15-day jail sentence Wednesday in Victoria provincial court to a 30-year-old shoplifter.

Robert John Lawless, of 157 Ontario, pleaded guilty to theft under $200 from Canada Safeway, 1907 Sooke Road.

Crown counsel Don Laughton told the court Lawless went into the Colwood Safeway store at about 3:50 p.m. June 25, selected two rib steaks and some cheese with a total value of $26.10, and placed them in his pockets. He then went to the checkout counter and paid for some potatoes and bread but walked out without attempting to pay for the other items.

Laughton said Lawless had been convicted Nov. 15, 1976 in Ontario for theft under $200 and given a one-month jail term. He was also convicted April 10, 1978 in Victoria of possession of stolen property and fined $300.

ALLAN TOLD an 18-year-old Campbell River woman that the last two persons who were sentenced by him for mischief received jail terms.

Donna Lynne Major, a former Nanaimo resident, pleaded guilty to mischief causing wilful damage to a window at 1007 Government Street on June 29.

Court was told Major had been asked to leave the nearby Kings Hotel beer parlor about 12:15 a.m. and, when walking by the store window which measured 1.75 metres by 2.5 metres and was valued at $500, kicked out the plate glass.

Major was arrested soon after and told Victoria police she was upset over being ejected from the licensed premises.

Allan imposed a $150 fine, placed her on 12 months probation, and ordered her to make restitution for the damage.

FINED $450 for impaired driving was Stanley Dennis Marlow, 44, of 1243 Bay.

Only 1 in 100 air alerts are for real

A staggering 99 per cent of the 150 aircraft emergency signals reported to the Pacific Rescue Centre in the first six months of 1980 proved to be false alarms.

Centre head Major Stanley White said Wednesday that almost all of the false alarms were caused by negligence.

The signals are given by electronic locator transmitters which federal legislation requires be carried on all aircraft. When activated they give out a signal on an emergency radio frequency. They are designed to be set off automatically on impact but can be set off accidentally during a bumpy landing.

"Most of these soundings are attributed to leaky batteries, corroded electrical circuitry or general carelessness," White said. "If pilots would only check their transmitters more often as the law requires, most of our false alerts would be eliminated."

White said a false transmitter signal is similar to a false alarm at a firehall, "but the cost is far different."

The primary response capability of the centre are the men, aircraft and helicopters of the Comox-based 442 Search and Rescue Squadron.

"And each time an aircraft is sent on a mission, even those caused by false alarms, it involves trained rescue specialists."

"However," White added, "when lives may be in danger, cost, inconvenience or a possible false alarm can't be considered—we just go."

The centre, busiest in Canada, has responded to 2,196 emergency calls of all kinds so far this year. The centre handled 2,115 calls in the first six months of 1979.

Regional pipeline gets cash

The Capital Region Board Wednesday authorized the expenditure of nearly $600,000 for pipes, fittings and valves for a pipeline to cross the Pat Bay Airport property and run along Mills Road to Sidney.

The board authorized a contract for up to $544,000 to Johns-Manville Canada Inc. for 500 millimetre and 450 mm pipe for the job; $35,000 to Terminal City Iron Works for special fittings, and $5,000 to Grinnell Ltd., for valves.

Final quantities will not be determined until detailed design and construction of the Sidney leg of the pipeline is completed.

Directors also gave two readings to a bylaw authorizing an increase in the cost of constructing the line from McTavish Road to Deep Cove and Sidney from $1.5 million to $2,141,000.

Region airs Langford tract plans

A comprehensive project by an offshoot company of OK Trucking and Paving to develop the western end of Langford Lake received an airing at the Capital Region Board's local planning and zoning committee meeting Wednesday.

Under discussion was merely the first phase of a development that would eventually see the company's gravel pit and adjoining land converted to areas for low and high-density housing and a light industrial area.

The first phase covers the lakefront area and would see the company, Goldstream Meadows, donate a large marshy area in the northwest corner of the lake to the region as parkland in consideration for 56 single-family lots being created on a 15-hectare site adjoining to the south. There are about 2.5 acres in a hectare.

Tom Loney, planning consultant for Goldstream Meadows, replied to a number of concerns raised by the region's planning department, the highways ministry, the municipal affairs ministry and the Fish and Wildlife Branch.

The principal objection of the region's planning department, said chief planner Jim Masterton, was that the subdivision plan proposed no dedication of the waterfront on Langford Lake as park.

Fisheries concerns included that point, the necessity of ensuring no contamination of the lake or its outlet creek and Goldstream River from septic fields or storm sewers, and increased fishing pressure.

Loney conceded that further negotiations might be required before the project could be brought to public hearing, and specifically that the Fish and Wildlife Branch's concerns be answered.

He assured directors that detailed studies by consultants had been done to ensure the subdivision would not pollute the lake.

Protests by the Langford Lake Improvement Association against the subdivision should carry little weight, he suggested, because their members, whose houses border other parts of the lake, are among the main polluters.

Code to shield B.C. farmhands

Farm workers and domestics will be brought under the protection of B.C.'s labor standard code when a new Employment Standards Act is approved by the Legislature.

Labor Minister Jack Heinrich introduced the legislation Wednesday afternoon.

The new laws call for a reduced work week, from 44 hours to 40, extended coverage for farm workers and domestics, and improved job protection for all employees including those on maternity leave. the legislation streamlines administration and strengthens enforcement procedures.

The bill is geared entirely to the protection of non-union workers who are not shielded by their own collective agreements with their employers.

Heinrich noted that while most employers with an unorganized work force already meet minimum standards, the bill ensured that all employers must provide minimum wages, minimum holidays and new minimum notice periods if employment is to be terminated.

Under the new legislation all employees must be provided with two weeks paid vacation every year, with the period increasing to three weeks after the employee has been on the payroll more than five years.

Farm labor contractors must be licensed and bonded under the new regulations and all female employees must be guaranteed at least 18 weeks of maternity leave with their services and benefits protected.

Heinrich said that in drafting the legislation he had aimed for four basic areas of concern—hours of work and overtime, annual vacations, maternity leave and employee protection.

Under hours of work and overtime, the reduced work week and any overtime worked would be supervised by the director of employment standards who would have the authority to limit the hours of work demanded if they are thought to be excessive or detrimental to the health and safety of the employee.

The new act also provides for the establishment of a labor standards board to replace the existing Board of Industrial Relations. It would have the power to order rectification and compensation for financial loss if any employer violates the act.

Under existing legislation the employee who felt he had been cheated in the matter of wages or other benefits has recourse to the courts. The board would have the authority to conduct its own investigation and make its own decisions.

Heinrich said the new legislation also provides for a broader application in that they would now apply to domestics and farm workers. He added: "There will be recognition of historical conditions in situations that require specially designed minumum wages for such workers.

"For example, farm workers employed on a piecework basis will be assured piecework rates that will enable an employee to earn, on the average, the equivalent of the minimum wage."

Under the new legislation domestic workers who "live in" must be guaranteed a daily wage based on the minimum wage of $3.40 an hour.

Wright project approved

North Saanich has given Victoria businessman Robert Wright tentative approval to develop his controversial 25-acre Tsehum Harbor property into a 35-lot luxury subdivision.

But the approval did not come free of restrictions.

WRIGHT, WHOSE company North Saanich Marina Ltd. owns 37 acres in the area, was given six months to meet the requirements which include a 100-foot buffer adjacent to the mean high water mark, five-per-cent parkland, and sufficient technical information to satisfy any existing or future concerns for the area.

By limiting the subdivision to 35 lots, the municipality has ensured that 7.5 acres remain in their natural state. The property's development has upset environmentalists who fear its effect on wildlife, especially birds nesting in the adjacent Blue Heron Basin.

AT COUNCIL'S request, Environment Minister Stephen Rogers has authorized a study of the foreshore's potential for sea farming. Earlier this year council failed in its attempt to persuade the B.C. Agricultural Land Commission to reverse its decision to lift the acreage from the agricultural land reserve.

Although the tentative approval for the subdivision has been given, both Wright and Mayor Eric Sherwood indicated that discussions would continue on other options for the property.

Access to federal jobs depends on residence

OTTAWA (CP) — People may have the right to work in whatever province they want, but thousands have been refused government jobs because of where they live, a spokesman for the Public Service Commission said this week.

Gaeten Jeaurond said the commission's system for hiring people would break down if it opened government jobs to every qualified person in the country.

Prime Minister Trudeau told delegates at the Liberal party convention in Winnipeg on the weekend that the federal government must stand behind the rights of Canadians to work in the province of their choice.

"It's the right of every Canadian to move where he wants, to seek a job where he wants and buy property where he wants in this country," Trudeau said.

"What Trudeau said was quite valid," Jeaurond said. "People should be able to work where they want.

"The elementary fact is that for the great portion of positions, it wouldn't be bright to open it up to everyone in Canada. The system would break down."

As a result "tens of thousands" of people had been turned down for jobs because of where they lived.

But those refusals had been made in accordance with guides established by the commission, which was responsible for all the government's hiring, firing and promotion, he said.

He said the guidelines were based on the commission's interpretation of the Public Service Employment Act, passed by Parliament in the mid 1960s.

"It's an Act of Parliament. You have to follow the rules."

His field of battle

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — The president of the fledgling Canadian Farmworkers Union says he's determined to fight for better working conditions and pay for his members.

So far, few people outside of the fields have heard of Raj Chouhan, 31, who has gathered more than 500 members to his cause.

"To get support from the other workers, you have to convince them that your struggle is a just struggle, that you're not in the struggle just to promote yourself or achieve something for yourself," he says.

"I'm from the Sikh religion and in their history, if you go 300 years back, you find hundreds of struggles that had been fought just to maintain their dignity and to win some rights," Chouhan said.

Photos of village life in India dot the walls of the New Westminster home which he and his wife Inder, 25, bought two years ago. They first met 11 years ago in India and were separated when Inder came to Canada in 1970. Three years later she sponsored Chouhan's entry into Canada and they married.

They both worked in the fields, until he found other jobs in a chemical plant, and later, a plywood mill.

Mrs. Chouhan has a large rash on her back which developed after she worked in a field sprayed with insecticide.

So far, the union has concentrated on the 8,000 to 9,000 workers in the Fraser Valley area, but Chouhan said a union representative went to Osoyoos in the Okanagan Monday to investigate allegations French-Canadian fruit pickers were facing discrimination there.

Chouhan said there was no minimum wage or compensation for injuries for fruit pickers.

Unemployment insurance was available only to those working 26 weeks, eliminating all but a handful from eligibility, he said.

Often a single tub of water provided both drinking and washing water for a few dozen workers, and the 12-hour work day was usual, he said.

Pay for a 16-pound flat of fruit is about $2.50, of which up to 40 per cent is deducted by labor contractors for transporting workers to the farms, Chouhan said.

A day's work, averaged thoughout the season, usually meant about $22.

B.C. Labor Minister Jack Heinrich has promised to introduce legislation giving farm workers the same basic protection available to other workers but Chouhan said the struggle could be bitter.

"Things will most likely be nasty on the picket line," he predicts. "This union doesn't believe in violence but that doesn't mean we won't defend ourselves if there is that kind of fight on the picket line."

Strike talk brings on rare old thirst

KELOWNA(CP) — Strike rumors are causing beer shortages at a local beer distribution warehouse as people prepare for the possibility of a shortage from a labor dispute in the brewery industry, a spokesman for Pacific Brewers Distributors said.

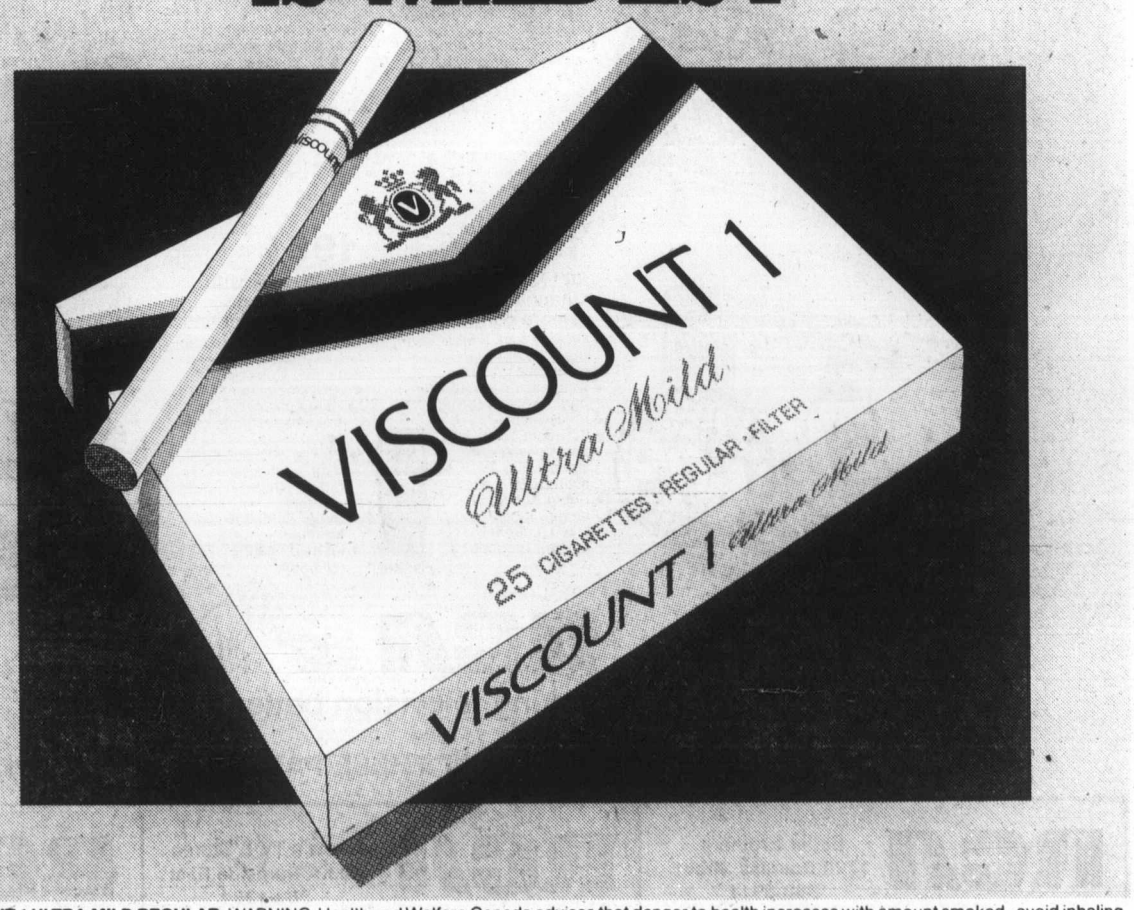

Negotiations have been continuing between union workers and management at B.C.'s three major breweries for a new collective agreement and a spokesman for one of the companies said Tuesday he has received no reports that would give cause for concern.

However, a distribution spokesman here said "the beer is going out as fast as the trucks can bring it in.

"We are experiencing shortages on a day-to-day basis," he said. "People are stocking up and you can't really blame them . . . nobody knows what is going on."

Spokesmen for local government liquor vendors say they have not experienced customers bulk buying beer, but noted that warm weather and increased tourist traffic have increased demand for the product.

Heat wave heads north as toll rises

By The Associated Press

Parts of northern regions of the United States received a taste of the heat wave that has blistered the Southwest, southern plains and the South on Wednesday as tempratures neared 38 degrees Celsius in such states as Indiana and Iowa.

"The weather is just plain miserable," said Ernie Block, a metereologist for the National Weather Service at Evansville, Ind.

AT MID-AFTERNOON, IT was 35C in Evansville. In Des Moines, Iowa, it was 34C. In Fort Worth, Texas, it was 40C; in Macon, Ga., 38C; in Kansas City, 38C; in Phoenix, Ariz., 41C.

Indiana authorities reported a death apparently tied to the heat wave, the first in that state, but the 177th in the country. The Marion County coroner's office said the death of a 75-year-old woman Tuesday at her Indianapolis home was caused by a heart condition probably aggravated by the heat.

SO FAR, 87 DEATHS IN Texas have been attributed to the heat. There have also been 29 in Arkansas, 17 in Oklahoma, 14 in Tennessee, seven each in Kansas and Georgia, five each in Mississippi and Missouri, four in Louisiana, and one in Alabama.

In Texas, agriculture commissioner Reagan Brown said that state's farmers have lost at least $750 million because of the heat and a long dry spell.

"A DROUGHT COULD NOT have come at a worse time," Brown said. "Farmers went into debt fairly heavily this season, most at high rates of interest at planting time."

Brown said reduced production is expected for grain sorghum, cotton, corn and hay.

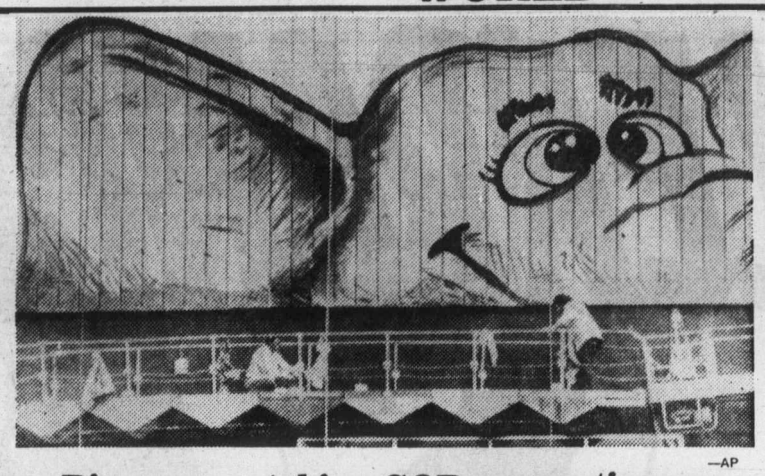

In Oklahoma, 30 communities were not only hot, they were thirsty. The communities are under either voluntary or mandatory water rationing because of the scorching heat, according to a report released Wednesday by Gov. George Nigh.

A survey of water systems showed that many Oklahoma communities would be put in a dangerous situation if there were fires because of low pressure and limited pumping capacity in their water systems.

"WE DON'T HAVE A WATER shortage problem, we have a water usage problem," Nigh said. He urged residents to conserve water.

Utilities reported that customers turning up air conditioners to cope with the heat are putting heavy demand on generating capacity.

Southern Co., the parent concern of utilities that provide power in Georgia, Alabama, Florida and Mississippi, reported a record demand for electricity Wednesday. Record demand was also reported Tuesday by Southern Indiana Gas and Electric Co.

Chinese fighters get British touch

LONDON (AFP) — China is to modernize its fleet of fighter planes with the technology and equipment of at least two British companies, informed aeronautical quarters said Wednesday.

A FIRST ORDER WORTH £40 million ($108 million) has been placed with the Marconi Avionics Co. after 18 months of discussions. The company specializes in manufacture of electronic equipment.

A second order, believed to concern arms for aircraft, — now is being negotiated with the Dynamics Division of British Aerospace, the big nationalized aeronautical company. That division makes guided missiles.

MARCONI AVIONICS, a subsidiary of the General Electric Co. refuses to disclose the nature of the material ordered. But observers believe that it consists of various electronic instruments which help pilots to pinpoint and attack targets.

The equipment would be fitted to the Chinese version of Soviet-designed MiG-19 and MiG-21 combat planes in the Chinese air force.

MARCONI SAYS ONLY that the five-year contract concerns delivery of part of the equipment, manufacture of another part in China under licence, training of Chinese personnel and after-sale services. The company is to open an office in Peking soon with a staff of about 12 people to help to carry out the order.

Payment will probably be made through the credit of $1.2 billion which British banks placed at China's disposal two years ago.

Arabs divided on oil wealth

AMMAN (AP) — A conference to build economic unity between rich and poor Arab states broke down in a dispute between the two sides over whether to use oil as a weapon against Israel and its Western allies, informed sources said Wednesday.

The dispute between hardline Syria and oil-rich Iraq forced an extension of the three-day conference of Arab economic and foreign ministers in an attempt to settle differences over long-term economic strategy, the sources said.

They said Syria, backed by Libya and the Palestine Liberation Organization, wants $5 billion in direct aid from oil-rich states to build up the military strength of those along the Israeli border — with the exception of Egypt, which has been ostracized since its peace agreement with Israel.

Syria produces no oil and borders Israel.

The hardliners also are said to be pushing for preferential oil prices for non-producing Arab countries and a cut in oil exports to the United States, Canada and European countries unless they yield to Arab demands for Palestinian autonomy.

Iraq, perceived as an increasingly moderate voice in the Arab world, favors some kind of indirect, long-term economic plan for development among the have-not Arab states, the sources said. The Iraqis are joined by other oil producers, notably Saudi Arabia, which is concerned the two-tier price plan would prompt demands for preferential treatment by non-Arab Islamic states and other poorer countries.

DIRECTORS OPPOSED TO BAN CLAIM IT CAN'T BE ENFORCED

Region setting snare for leghold traps

Despite misgivings by several directors that a ban on leghold traps in the Capital Region could not be enforced, the board voted in favor Wednesday of proceeding with a banning bylaw and seeking powers to pass it.

A recommendation that a bylaw to ban the traps, and that the region ask for letters patent from the provincial government to pass it, came from the local works and services committee.

Leach
. . . no problem

SOOKE director Don Rittaler opposed the idea, saying the provincial government licenses trappers and it was therefore a provincial responsibility.

He added there were 534 square miles in his area alone and more than 900 square miles in the region's area of responsibility and asked "how are we going to police it?"

Oak Bay Ald. Shirley Dowell expressed concern that a bylaw would mean hiring additional staff to police it.

Director Mac Tipton of Metchosin said the region should not pass a bylaw to control a half a dozen trappers when it would be unenforceable and was a provincial responsibility.

"I can support urging the province to bring in something better than leghold traps," he said.

CHAIRMAN James Campbell was also opposed, saying that while he could not condone cruelty, he believed the committee had been "stampeded" into its recommendation by a lopsided presentation of leghold trap opponents.

"It will accomplish nothing in reality, except stop the flow of letters, because we don't have any enforcement capability."

SIDNEY Mayor Norma Sealey said all the recommendation asked was that one particular method of trapping "that is cruel and inhumane" be banned.

"We don't have to employ someone to skulk through the woods looking for violators. I take the view that people are generally law-abiding."

Central Saanich Mayor David Hill said leghold traps were a hazard to household pets and children.

THE REGION'S animal control officer, Bill Leach, produced two types of trap he said were more humane—the instant-killing Conibear trap and a cage-like affair used to remove raccoons and wildcats from farm areas.

He said he expected little trouble in enforcing a leghold trap bylaw.

Injunction muzzles developer's pleas

The one voice which would have offered unqualified approval for a batch of Capital Regional District bylaws was stilled by a court injunction at a public hearing on the bylaws Wednesday, and with Transtide Industries Ltd. out of the way there were few unqualified endorsements of the region's latest attempt to bring some order to development and conservation in the Highlands.

It was an application by Transtide, made public on June 25, which generated the latest flurry of activity on the Highlands. The corporation owns 2,482 acres there and proposed to give 1,401 acres to the Capital Region for use as parkland in exchange for a two-acre average lot size on the remaining 1,081 acres.

The current minimum lot size in effect on the property is 10 acres.

The bylaws on the table Wednesday would have given Transtide its small lots, and zoned most of the rest of the Highlands, including not only the CRD's 1,401 acres but also several thousand acres of adjacent property owned by others, with a 29-acre minimum.

But hours before the public hearing, Hassan Kamil of Sidney was granted an injunction against Transtide's land swap proposal. Kamil argued that he has an option to buy 1,681 of Transtide's Highlands property, 1,260 of which Transtide now proposes to give to the region.

With the injunction in effect, a lawyer for Transtide told the public hearing that he was prevented from speaking on the company's behalf because to do so could be in contempt of court.

Transtide's absence from the floor was more than filled by those opposed to the bylaws completely or in part. Most of the approximately 200 people who showed up for the meeting supported the 29-acre minimum lot size for all parts of the Highlands, including all of the Transtide property.

To grant an exception to Transtide would encourage a flood of similar applications from other developers and would encourage land assembly into large parcels for the purpose of making subdivision deals with the region.

Those speakers said as much as possible of the Highlands should be left in its undeveloped state, to preserve in close proximity to the Greater Victoria urban area a wilderness which can be enjoyed by generations to come.

They also questioned the ability of the rocky and swampy Highlands to support the relatively intensive water and sewer services which subdivision into two-acre lots would require.

Some opponents of the CRD-Transtide swap said the proposal is blatantly discriminatory against other Highlands property owners who want to subdivide their property, and they called for a comprehensive development plan for the Highlands before any other new bylaws are drafted.

A spokesman for one residents group said approval of the bylaws would mean legal action against the CRD from residents who object to having their property put into the 29-acre zone.

"We shall seek compensation and damages for actions taken by you," Langford regional director Ed Lubick was warned.

One of the few speakers who argued in favor of the Transtide proposal was a Munns Road property owner, who noted that if the zoning bylaws failed, Transtide still has the option to develop its property in 10-acre lots.

Lifeguard stand awash

High water level in Elk-Beaver Lake has led to incongruous scene where permanently-fixed lifeguard stand, complete with life support equipment, is several metres from the shoreline in water deeper than the ankles. Elk Lake lifeguard Debbie Miles seems to be making the most of the situation.

New shades to ease Crystal's sun burns

The Crystal Garden will now have the restful, jungle atmosphere it was intended to have.

Louvre-type shading has been chosen for the tropical indoor garden and will be delivered in about three weeks, Provincial Capital Commission chief executive officer George Giles said Tuesday.

The shading resembles a large venetian blind and can be manually opened or closed depending on whether it is cloudy or sunny.

Giles said, "As the sun moves across the roof we can open it up behind it. It's a good system. We've tested it and seen its simplicity, and it looks like the best answer."

Cost of the shading will range between $16,000 and $25,000, he said.

Chief gardener at the Crystal, Rex Murfitt, said he was pleased that the garden will now have shading, particularly the louvre type.

"It will give the atmosphere I want to achieve, that of a green, restful jungle without the stress of direct sunshine," he said.

Foliage in the glass-enclosed garden, which opened to the public about three months ago, was being damaged by the sun because there was no shading.

Declining attendance at the garden had been attributed in part to the heat caused by sunlight reflecting through the unprotected glass.

The garden has about $50,000 worth of plants.

Two horticultural consultants recommended to the commission in March, 1979, a year before the garden opened, that shading be installed for the benefit of the paying customers as well as the plants.

Gulf Islanders win day on buses but test hinted

A turbulent 2½-hour debate Wednesday on whether outlying areas of the Capital Region should be included in the transit area ended with both Saltspring and the Outer Gulf Islands being left out.

But board chairman James Campbell, a principal proponent of including the islands in the transit area, said immediately after the question had been settled that he intended to seek yet another review of the decision.

The issue has been batted back and forth ever since the provincial government took the transit ball from B.C. Hydro and threw it into the court of the regions.

Recent spats over the issue have seen it raised again and again, with Campbell and directors from most of the rural areas in favor of including outlying areas, and the inner core directors and Saltspring Island representative Yvette Valcourt strenuously opposed.

Mayors William Tindall of Victoria and Mel Couvelier of Saanich "have been sold a bill of goods" by Valcourt, Campbell charged. They believe that by excluding the outer areas they will save on the cost of having to provide bus service to them, a blow to the principle of regionalism.

Several Gulf Islanders spoke in opposition, saying bus service to their areas would be useless.

Sooke director Don Rittaler threw down his pencil in disgust when Tindall moved an amendment to exclude his area too—an area already given the nod for a pro-rated cost system. The amendment was defeated.

So was one by Sidney Mayor Norma Sealey that would have seen the added cost of excluding the islands from the transit area put onto the four core municipalities' tabs.

When all the voting was done, Couvelier and Tindall left for a special meeting dealing with police job action. Couvelier remarked he hoped no one would pull any tricks after they were gone.

The two were barely out of the meeting chamber when Campbell dropped his bombshell.

Observing that 10 directors with 21 votes were in favor of exclusion while only eight directors with 31 votes were against, he said he intended to use special powers given to him under section 240 of the Municipal Government Act to have the matter reconsidered within 30 days.

Obviously he hopes some of the urban representatives will be on vacation when he tries to raise the matter again.

Saanich Ald. John Mika, a strong supporter of excluding the islands, told Campbell he'd "better sleep" on the idea of reconsideration.

Campbell

Assault suspected in Saanich case

Saanich detectives were still trying to determine late Wednesday night whether a "hysterical" teenage girl was the victim of a sexual attack several hours earlier at Elk Lake.

They were waiting to question her further at Royal Jubilee Hospital where she was taken for examination, as well as her extreme emotional upset.

Police first went to the scene to answer a report that a woman was unconscious, but found, instead, the hysterical girl they described only as a juvenile.

Preliminary investigation led them to believe there had been an indecent assault.

Lack of toilets worrying visitor centre

When nature calls in the City of Gardens, relief is far away.

The lack of public toilets in downtown Victoria has Visitor Information Centre officials worried.

In a letter to city council, information centre president Les Wood says the problem can no longer be ignored.

The least council can do, he says, is to upgrade the few existing facilities.

"It is virtually impossible to maintain satisfactory conditions in washrooms which were constructed in the early '20s," he says.

The only two public washrooms in the city core, Wood says, are in Centennial Square and at the Causeway, next to the information centre.

The latter are open only during the summer months, he adds.

Centre staff members, he says, are instructed not to send people to hotels because the hotel operators feel "it is not their responsibility to provide for the public at large."

What's ticket spitter doing at Thetis Lake?

Reporters' notebook

"Why is there a ticket spitter at the entrance to Thetis Lake Park?"

That's what Ald. John Cooper wanted to know at a recent parks committee meeting.

He had arrived at the park and was forced to leave again because he didn't have any change for the ticket machine.

"Because it's a moneymaker," Mayor William Tindall replied.

Based on that logic, Cooper said, the city might as well put ticket spitters at the entrances to Beacon Hill Park.

"We're thinking about it," the mayor replied, tongue firmly lodged in his cheek.

Apropos the ticket spitter at Thetis Lake Park: It's a moneymaker all right, but only because very few people know that the towaway warning is but an empty threat.

If people knew that they could just drive past the machine and park their cars without running the risk of having them towed away, and nobody would pay to get into Thetis Lake Park, now, would they?

And we're not going to tell them, are we?

KNOWN FOR his helpfulness, Judge William Ostler outdid himself this week in Victoria provincial court.

When lawyer Robert Price appeared to have trouble seeing his book and confessed he had forgotten his glasses, Ostler quickly removed his and offered them to Price, adding they were bi-focals.

THE MEETING called by Oak Bay council Monday night for an airing of residents' complaints about the dumping of raw sewage into the ocean, had been advertised by Oak Bay municipality as starting at 7:30 p.m.—but didn't get under way until almost 8.

The unthinkable happened—nobody had a key to the senior citizens' centre and the crowd of some 200, including high-priced experts from the Capital Region Board, milled around until a red-faced Jim Craven, municipal administrator, obtained a master key from the Oak Bay police station.

Craven muttered something about "someone being lost for good after this," but since the weather was fine, nobody complained too much.

There were even vague suggestions about holding the meeting outside.

ALTHOUGH SOME speakers cited London's Thames River as an example of pollution cleanup, Ray Le Noury, the Capital Region's consulting engineer overseeing the consulting engineers, said he had worked on the Thames project which provides for secondary treatment only "and I certainly wouldn't drink the water."

ON A FINAL NOTE, professional diver Frank White, in pressing for a quick end to the dumping of raw sewage on the beaches, cited lost tourism revenue from divers, and added:

"I am sure you would not want to swim in my septic tank, but unfortunately I have to swim in yours."

IF FINANCE Minister Hugh Curtis is beaming these days, it isn't because provincial revenues are picking up a little after a nervous slump.

It's because in 1982 the International Monetary Conference will be held in Vancouver.

The high-powered banking organization, which carries names like Rockefeller on its 200-member list, last met in New Orleans.

What we can't understand is why it isn't coming to Victoria . . . maybe as the first convention in our new centre?

AND SPEAKING of Curtis, it wasn't really a case of suggesting he couldn't manage on his cabinet minister's salary when Notebook mentioned June 30 that the man on the no-longer-in-service tape at B.C. Tel sounded a lot like "old golden voice"—merely a mention of a coincidence.

Veteran newscaster-journalist-roaster Bruce Lowther, now of Capital Cable 10, hastened to point out that the voice is well-known in the B.C. broadcast industry and actually belongs to Bill Phillips, once with Curtis' old station, C-FAX, and latterly of the new Vancouver FM jazz station C-JAZ.

WHEN Jim Poling, bureau chief for Canadian Press in B.C., arrived in the press gallery at the Legislature on Tuesday, he was sporting a scrubby whisker-growth which looked like a poor start for a beard.

What, he was asked, was that on his chin.

"It grew while I was waiting for the ferry," he replied without hesitation.

And who can challenge that?

Westinghouse heirs win funds from minor trusts

Two brothers, direct descendants of inventor George Westinghouse, were granted $70,000 each when family trust terms were altered Wednesday in B.C. Supreme Court.

The two are George Kunater, 27, and Michael Kunater, 25, who live in Austria and who stand to inherit about $2 million through other family trusts, according to Victoria lawyer Allan Cox.

Cox, representing Margaret Kunater, also of Austria, brought an application before Mr. Justice Jack Ruttan seeking revocation of two trusts established by his client, the mother of the now-grown boys, who was a Westinghouse before her marriage.

The brothers will benefit on the death of their mother by Westinghouse trusts of $241,000, $960,000 and one in excess of $600,000.

Mrs. Kunater established investment trusts of approximately $70,000 each as part of an estate planning scheme when her sons were nine and 11, intending the income to be used by the boys for their maintenance, education or advancement. The capital sums were to be inherited by the offspring if the sons were to marry.

The trusts were established in B.C. because of family connections and other considerations at the time.

But Cox told Ruttan that factors including foreign exchange rates and the tax laws had changed substantially since 1964. The boys have reached majority and are in a position to manage the trust themselves, he said.

A vast imbalance has developed between Canadian funds and Austrian marks, making the dollar worth only about half its 1964 value, Cox said.

In view of these factors and the substantial amounts of money the brothers will inherit ultimately, Cox said, maintaining two comparatively insignificant trusts is both inconvenient and not worth the cost.

Letting the sons—neither of them yet married—have their trust capital now would give them a sense of financial independence, "not tied to their mother's financial apron strings," and teach them responsibility for handling sums of money, Cox said on behalf of his client.

Shirley Kay, of Vancouver, appearing for the public trustee, opposed the application because it would remove the rights of trust to the unborn potential beneficiaries.

According to law, she said, any variation of a trust must provide financial benefits, which would not occur in this case. It might be better, she suggested, to allow the conversion of invested funds to Austrian securities rather than remove entirely any financial benefit accruing to the unborn.

Ruttan said he agreed there was a potential detriment to the unborn, but looking at it from the point of view of a reasonable adult the benefits of revoking the trusts outweighed the disadvantages.

She asked for Ruttan's reasons in writing, enabling the public trustee to consider an appeal.

'Stay tuned' is word on reforms

MONTREAL (CP) — Federal and provincial ministers completed presentation of their opening positions on constitutional reform here Wednesday and start hard negotiations today.

Attorney-General Roy Romanow of Saskatchewan, co-chairman of the conference, said the ministers are not in full agreement on the 12 points.

But reaching a consensus wasn't its purpose, he added.

The points under discussion include resource ownership and interprovincial trade, offshore resources, powers over the economy, communications, family law, the Senate, the Supreme Court and fisheries.

The ministers also considered a proposed preamble to a new constitution, a rights charter, equalization payments and the bringing to Canada of the British North America Act.

Romanow said there was a "good general tone" to the talks, and over the summer the ministers would try to reach agreement on the points.

A draft charter of basic rights and language rights presented by the federal government did not get unanimous approval and will probably take up a large part of summer discussions.

"You people should stay tuned," Romanow told reporters. "It's going to take us a few months at least.

Federal Justice Minister Jean Chretien said Ottawa is willing to discuss and negotiate the exact terms of the charter. "We believe it is the best solution."

Claude Morin, Quebec's intergovernmental affairs minister, said Quebec is opposed to sections of the charter which would give English-speaking Canadians the right to English education in Quebec.

"There will be a problem there if the federal government insists on returning to the situation that existed in Quebec 15 years ago."

Under Quebec's present language law, only children with at least one parent who attended an English school in Quebec may educate their children in English. Morin said that this provision has created linguistic peace in Quebec.

The Quebec minister said his province is not absolutely opposed to putting a charter of basic rights in the constitution, but, "we are more adamant on linguistic rights."

Quebec representatives at the discussions also feel that Chretien's proposal on economic powers would increase Ottawa's powers at the expense of the provinces.

Without naming them, Morin said that seven of the 10 provinces expressed partial or complete opposition to the charter.

Wife slayer: No parole for 12 years

VANCOUVER (CP) — Pasquale Antonio Redavid, 48, convicted last week of the Nov. 20, 1979 shooting death of his wife Vincenza, was sentenced Tuesday to life in prison with no eligibility for parole for 12 years.

Redavid was found guilty of a reduced charge of second-degree murder last week in B.C. Supreme Court.

Women not like loggers, B.C. town fumes

DAWSON CREEK (CP) — Residents of this northeastern B.C. community are upset about published comments which describe the area as a "lonely, God-forsaken town" whose women look like loggers.

Some of the comments contained in author Jim Christy's book were repeated Saturday in the Toronto Globe and Mail and many residents planned to protest Christy's comments with letters to the newspaper.

Christy quoted Froelich Raney, a National Geographic writer, as calling the community 37 years ago a "lonely, God-forsaken town." And he said one of the town's hairdressers said the women looked like loggers.

Residents of this community of 13,000 near the Alberta border are upset with Christy's references to cheaply-built modular homes that have "been tossed like a handful of dice willy-nilly over the barrens."

Town leaders denounced Christy's book, Rough Road to the North; Travels along the Alaska Highway, as "a bunch of rubbish and ignorant dribble."

Mayor Sid Cooper said Tuesday the description of housing wasn't true.

"All construction in Dawson Creek conforms to the National Building Code and we've just adopted a new community plan."

He gallantly defended the town's womenfolk as "the best-looking you'll find anywhere" with "exceptionally soft and natural complexions."

Butch Johnson, Chamber of Commerce president, said if Christy was really interested in finding out something about the community, he would have made some effort to contact the mayor or chamber of commerce.

"You can't see much of the town while sitting in the Alaska Cafe with your face buried in a plate of mince pie," said Johnson.

TV watching saved a life

KAMLOOPS(CP) — A four-year-old girl was saved from drowning this week because her three cousins learned artificial respiration by watching television.

Tara-Jane Roberts was spotted lying face-down in about one metre of water just off the shore of the Thompson River near Heffley Creek, about 10 kilometres from Kamloops.

She was listed in satisfactory condition in hospital where she was being held for observation.

Barney O'Brien, 12, said he learned artificial respiration by watching it performed on television.

Barney's 14-year-old brother Gordon said Tara had stopped breathing and they started mouth-to-mouth resuscitation. Barney continued the respiration and his 11-year-old sister Phyllis helped by pumping Tara's chest while Gordon ran to a nearby trailer for help.

Phyllis said water and white foam came out of Tara's mouth and Barney said he found giving artificial respiration sickening but he kept it up. Gordon later returned with help.

Tammy's parents Tammy and Bruce Roberts were out shopping when the incident occurred. Mrs. Roberts said she knows now that she won't have to worry about leaving the cousins to take care of the children.

Winnipeg probing tap water asbestos

WINNIPEG (CP) — Manitoba's health minister has ordered a check of reports that Winnipeg drinking water is contaminated with potentially dangerous amounts of asbestos.

Bud Sherman said he hadn't yet been able to get a copy of an unpublished federal health and welfare study which is supposed to reveal contamination more than 30 times levels accepted in the United States.

Job-makers falling behind

TORONTO (CP) — Jobs in Ontario are disappearing faster than new ones are appearing, a research agency says.

A report by the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto said there were 337,000 people out of work in the province at the end of April, 91,000 of them in Toronto.

The council, a voluntary organization that does research for social agencies, said the net growth of jobs—the difference between jobs lost and created—declined by 70 per cent during the year ended in May. The decline in Toronto was 95 per cent.

The closing of 10 auto-parts plants in the province cost 4,400 jobs, the report said.

"In the past, we have relied on economic growth and new job creation to replace lost jobs. This is no longer enough.

"We have to start looking at how to retain the jobs we now have because loss of jobs is beginning to outstrip new job creation."

Retraining and relocation plans "are almost non-existent and labor-force planning by employers is dismal."

The public, and not just plant management, should have a say in whether a firm will be closed, the council said, because the public must bear the cost of unemployment insurance and welfare plus the problems associated with the social unrest of the jobless.

The council said 127,000 jobs were created in Ontario during the year ended in May, 1979. During the following year, that figure dropped to 37,000.

More than half of Ontario's unemployed are victims of layoffs.

36-pounder breaks tie in Victoria Press contest

Victoria Press advertising manager Dennis Thompson has claimed undisputed lead for heaviest chinook in the VPL edition of the King Fisherman Contest, with a 36-pounder he caught off Beechey Head Monday on anchovy.

He was tied for top spot with Jerry Armstead, husband of switchboard operator Mary Armstead. They both had 34 pounders from Beechey Head.

A few big trout are still being taken by keen anglers and the biggest so far in July is a 6½-pound cutthroat caught by Kevin Gill of Port Alberni in Great Central Lake on a No. 2 Metric spinner and weighed at the Ark Resort.

Eight-year-old Ryan Green reeled in a bigger chinook than most people catch in a lifetime of fishing when he went out fishing in San Juan Bay on July 1. He got a 32½-pounder on herring and with only 25-pound-test leader. He becomes a contender for the Fish of the Year prize from the Old Gold Shop for junior anglers and for now wins a King Fisherman fun decal, as does Gill for his big trout.

Saanich council fills garbage recycling job

A recycling co-ordinator appointed by Saanich Wednesday will have the job of promoting a pilot garbage recycling project in a small section of the municipality.

Betsy Sweeney's interest and involvement in recycling began nine years ago when she worked as a volunteer for Project Recycle. When the Capital Region District took over the recycling operation in 1974, she was hired to help increase public awareness of recycling and assist in developing a chain of depots for the regional recycling program.

Five years ago, she was hired by the University of Victoria's Alma Mater Society to design a pilot recycling program and prepare a recycling feasibility study. As a result of the study, the university established its own recycling system.

In a survey conducted last year, more than 60 per cent of Saanich residents said they would be willing to set out recyclable items for collection.

Council recently authorized a nine-month pilot project which will see curbside pickup of recyclable items from about 2,000 homes. An area has yet to be selected for the project.

Giscard urged to remember U.S. alliance

WUERZBURG (Reuter) — Opposition leader Franz Josef Strauss warned visiting French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing on Wednesday that France and West Germany should not build a stronger Europe at the expense of the United States.

Strauss, chairman of the Christian Social Union and an opposition candidate for chancellor in next October's national elections, made the remark in a speech welcoming Giscard d'Estaing to Bavaria.

HE SAID THE FRANCO-German partnership should not be "a two-state union against a wider European association or confronting the United States."

Giscard d'Estaing, abandoning his prepared text, replied by reaffirming his call for a stronger western Europe to play an independent role in world affairs. He made no reference to the U.S.

"SINCE WE ARE TWO STRONG and lively countries, we should correct a historical anomaly to which we have become used . . . the self-effacement of Europe in the world," he told the Bavarian premier.

Strauss, who blamed the Soviet Union for the current grim international situation, referred directly to the French leader's call for European independence.

"You, Mr. President, began your visit to the Federal Republic by saying that Europe's world role should be restored.

"Today, neither a single state nor the addition of several states can provide the necessary basis. What we need is rather a real increase in power."

IN WHAT APPEARED TO BE an oblique criticism of Giscard d'Estaing's summit with President Brezhnev in Warsaw last May, Strauss warned against any indulgence toward Moscow.

"History teaches us that indulgence towards the desires of a brutal power does not preserve peace but compromises it," he said, adding that western unity was an essential condition for securing world peace.

THE BAVARIAN PREMIER later had an hour-long private meeting with Giscard d'Estaing, who has met several opposition politicians during his state visit.

The French president then flew to Luebeck on the last leg of his swing through the West German provinces before returning to Bonn today.

Disease stalks baby hospital

LISBON (Reuter) — A killer disease is raging out of control in Portugal's largest maternity hospital, and 25 of about 100 infected babies have died, a senior doctor said.

The mystery disease has been sweeping through Lisbon's Alfredo da Costa Hospital since December. And, said Dr. Jose Miguel Ramos de Almeida, the hospital's director of pediatric medicine, it has so far defied all efforts to eliminate it.

Babies normally contract the disease in the first two weeks of life. They suffer acute diarrhea, followed by dehydration, weight loss, and shock.

But the first symptoms are slow to appear, and many infected babies have already left the hospital. Doctors say late treatment diminishes their chance of survival.

Medical staff members have traced the origin of the disease to the hospital's emergency unit operating theatre, where most of the early cases were delivered by forceps.

Infected babies are isolated in special wards which are constantly swabbed with disinfectant. But Ramos de Almeida said: "There is an undisputable risk that the disease may spread to other hospitals."

A public scare has developed over the disease. Some mothers are refusing to have their babies at the hospital, and Ramos de Almeida said at least one home birth has resulted in a child developing permanent brain damage.

Convicts get sip of career

VIENNA, Ill. (AP) — Running a still used to be a good way to get into jail but now a still operation may help prisoners who are getting out.

The Vienna Correctional Centre is teaching prisoners how to operate a still and make alcohol in the belief that it will give them a highly marketable job skill when they are released.

However, the alcohol will not be for drinking — it'll be for fuel.

"WHO IS CRYING NOW." That was the comment of a happy but surprisingly subdued Harvey Stevenson following Victoria Budgets' doubleheader sweep of the Canadian national team.

The Budgets downed the national team 3-1 and 4-1 before a near-capacity crowd at Royal Athletic Park.

It was a satisfying sweep for the players, the fans and particularly for Stevenson who was upset over comments made by Emil Sabourin, the Canadian team's chef de mission.

Sabourin had called Stevenson a crier and said that he expected special treatment from the national team — treatment that he said Stevenson didn't give when he coached the pick-up bolstered Budgets to the Pan-American Games gold medal last summer.

In rebuttal, Stevenson says, "I never kept anyone away from his team for more than two weekends during all the time we toured. There was one weekend for the Arizona tour and one weekend in Santa Rosa."

Stevenson had three pickups last year, pitchers Cliff Bishop of Winnipeg and Rob Guenter of Saskatoon and second baseman Tom Henderson of Halifax.

Ironically, Guenter now pitches for Budgets and was the centre of controversy this year. He has been shuffled back and forth between St. Catharines, home of the national team, and Victoria and Stevenson feels the Canadian team could have been more considerate of Budgets' needs.

BUDGETS HAVE heavy league and Super Series schedules but only three pitchers this year. When Guenter is gone Smith and Wilson must carry the load and if one of them should get hurt the Budgets would have big problems.

Smith did suffer a 30-stitch cut to his non-pitching arm and Wilson had to be hospitalized a couple of days because of a kidney ailment but fortunately neither missed much throwing time.

Stevenson says that third baseman John Green, also picked up by the nationals, was never a factor in the problems.

"We didn't mind if he played for the national team against us because we have plenty of depth in the infield."

Budgets have been without Guenter for eight of their last 10 Super Series games but have managed to win seven of those eight, including three of four from the U.S. national team and the sweep over Canada.

Beating the Canadian team without the use of Guenter and Green only made the victories that much sweeter for Stevenson.

WHEN YOU'RE the ones who lost the year before it's difficult to complain, even legitimately, without being tagged sore losers.

That's what Stevenson and the Budgets are up against but when you feel you're right, speak out, and that's what Stevenson has done.

Sabourin also spoke out and that's good but he also provided some incorrect information regarding the performance of the Canadian team against the U.S. team.

Presumably Sabourin was at the games involving the two clubs but he may not have been. Anyway he said that Canada was 1-3 in Midland and that the clubs split a doubleheader in St. Catharines.

Everyone else questioned, including players of the Canadian and U.S. teams, says Canada was 0-4 in Midland and 0-2 in St. Catharines.

Maybe the problem is that administrators like Sabourin should stick to the paperwork and leave the field work to the manager and coach.

The club concept is still preferable to an all-star format. Budgets proved last year that it can work well but the manager and coach must have full power over who is to be picked up and to who plays when. Keep the bureaucrats off the field.

Hopefully Canada will come around in time for the worlds, which start Friday in Tacoma, and hopefully Green and Guenter will lead the way to victory.

How about Canada winning the final 1-0 on a no-hitter by Guenter and a home run by Green?

BUDGET BITS: Playing against his mates, Green made three putouts and five assists and went one for six at the plate . . . One area where the U.S. team excelled over all others that have played here was crying to the umpires. That's despite the fact that in the four games the Budgets had seven walks and 34 strikeouts while Midland had 16 walks and 24 strikeouts . . . The Canadian team behaved much more admirably on the field and there was little complaining even though the same home plate umpires worked all six games . . . Victoria will host the Northwest League tournament Aug. 8-10. It will be an eight-team, double-knockout with league champions playing eighth and so on down the line. John Oster, best known for the fine job he did on the 1974 Canadian tournament, has been named tournament chairman. Ticket prices have yet to be determined . . . Oster is heading a committee that is hoping to bring the Canadians here in 1982. This year the national tournament is in Saskatoon and next year it's in Hull . . . Seattle Peterbilt nailed Own Walford for 11 hits but still lost 4-3 to the U.S. national team. The reasons were Peterbilt regulars Butch Batt and Bruce Stuart who were picked up by the national team. Batt drove in one run and Stuart hit a two-run homer against his teammates. The U.S. took the second game 2-1 behind the two-hit pitching of Bob Ryan . . . In other exhibition play Vancouver Thirsks beat Argentina 1-0 and 8-0 and tied Japan 0-0. Clearbrook Four Star Construction beat Japan 3-0 . . . Canada opens against Argentina Friday . . . Budgets lead the Northwest League with a 16-5 record while Peterbilt is second at 15-7. Yakima Pepsi is third at 7-4 and is the only team to have lost fewer games than Victoria. The Pepsi play here Friday. A game postponed earlier with the score tied 4-4 after eight innings will be completed prior to the regular doubleheader. Play starts at 6:30 p.m.

Valentine leads Whitecap charge

Carl Valentine notched his second three-goal performance of the season as Vancouver Whitecaps blanked Atlanta Chiefs 4-0 in a North American Soccer League game Wednesday night.

Goalkeeper Bruce Grobbelaar protected a shutout before 2,878 Atlanta fans as the Whitecaps improved their record to 11-11.

Vancouver got the only goal it needed at 10:53 in the first half when Ray Hankin deflected a header off Atlanta defender Tony Whelan, past goalkeeper Bill Mishalow and into the goal. Valentine picked up an assist on the play.

Valentine scored his first at 27:15 with an assist from Trevor Whymark, then gave his team a 3-0 halftime lead with an unassisted tally.

Valentine's third of the night and seventh of the season came at 73:35, with assists from Rudy Krol and Buzz Parsons.

The loss dropped Atlanta to 5-15.

In other games: New York Cosmos edged Philadelphia Fury 2-1; Rochester Lancers shut out Portland Timbers 2-0; Fort Lauderdale Strikers downed Detroit 3-1; Tampa Bay Rowdies dumped San Jose Earthquake 4-1; Minnesota Kicks outscored Tulsa Roughnecks 5-4; Los Angeles Aztec edged California Surf 3-2; San Diego Sockers blanked Washington Diplomats 2-0 and Dallas Tornado beat Chicago Sting 4-2.

Giorgio Chinaglia scored a pair of goals to power the Cosmos to victory before 31,278 fans at East Rutherford, N.J.

Chinaglia's goals, his 22nd and 23rd of the season, bettered the goal scoring total of the entire Philadelphia team's season and put him into first place in the NASL scoring race.

Chinaglia opened scoring for the Cosmos at 43:09 when he put a cross from Angelo DiBernardon past goalkeeper Bob Rigby.

The Fury battled back to even the count at 61:35 but Chinaglia put the Cosmos ahead for good at the 71:15 mark when he took a pass from Johan Neeskens.

The victory was the Cosmos' fourth in a row and improved their record to 16-5. The Fury, coached by former Cosmos coach Eddie Firmani, suffered its second straight setback and slipped to 6-14.

At Portland, Pat Ercoli and Bronco Segota scored the goals and Enzo DiPede earned his third shutout of the season.

Portland outshot Rochester 22-16.

The Lancers improved their record 10-9 with 82 points in the National Conference East. Portland remains in last place in the National West with a 6-14 record and 55 points.

The Tampa Bay victory was sparked by Oscar Fabbiani and captain Jan Van Der Veen.

Fabbiani scord two goals and Van Der Veen assisted on three goals while Neill Roberts, the team's leading scorer, had a goal and an assist.

Tampa Bay dominated the first half, scoring four goals between 11:21 and 36:27 before 15,809 fans. San Jose changed goalkeepers in the second half and Chris Turner prevented any further Rowdie goals.

The first Rowdies' goal was the most controversial play of the game. Fabbiani took a pass from Van Der Veen and appeared to be caught by an offside trap. Fabbiani, last year's leading NASL scorer, kept moving and headed the ball into the goal as San Jose protested.

Linesman Robert Donahue crashed to the ground in a collision with a protesting San Jose player, Hans Kraay Jr. Kraay helped Donahue up but received a yellow card for dissent. A few minutes later in a continuing protest, Best also was cautioned.

The win leaves the Rowdies at 13-9, one point behind the first place Fort Lauderdale Strikers in the American Conference Eastern Division, while San Jose dropped to 6-15.

Esks win, Als lose in openers

Grey Cup finalists Edmonton Eskimos and Montreal Alouettes opened their 1980 schedules in very different fashion Wednesday.

The seemingly impregnable Grey Cup champion Eskimos humbled Winnipeg Blue Bombers 36-13 in a Canadian Football League game at Edmonton while the Alouettes were stunned 18-11 by perennial also-ran Toronto Argonauts at Toronto.

The Blue Bombers were considered by most football observers to be the most improved team in the Western Conference but they failed miserably in their first big test.

The Eskimos manhandled the Bombers in the first half, building a 29-3 lead.

Veteran quarterback Tom Wilkinson threw three touchdown passes in the second quarter to spark the Eskimos, utilizing the best set of receivers in the CFL.

Wilkinson picked apart the Winnipeg secondary in the 30 minutes he played. He directed Edmonton to scores five of the seven times they had the ball in the first half.

Tom Scott had two touchdown receptions for Edmonton, while Brian Kelly and Waddell Smith also caught touchdown passes. Running back Neil Lumsden, acquired during the off-season, opened the scoring for Edmonton on a seven-run touchdown run at 9:16 of the first quarter. Dave Cutler converted all five touchdowns and Hank Ilesic added a 52-yard single for the Eskimos.

Winnipeg opened the scoring early in the first quarter on Trevor Kennerd's 45-yard field goal, but couln't get on the scoreboard again until Mike Holmes scored on a 14-yard TD pass at 5:39 of third quarter. Kennerd converted that and wound up the scoring with a 29-yard field goal in the final minute of the quarter.

At Toronto, Dave Newman set the stage for the Toronto upset when he scored on an electrifying 72-yard pass from quarterback Mark Jackson in he first quarter.

The Argos, playing before a home-opening crowd of 32,250 at Exhibition Stadium, were not expected to offer last year's Eastern Conference winners more than token opposition this early in the season. The Als, Grey Cup finalist the last three years, were undefeated in four exhibition games, while the Argos went 0-4.

Zenon Andrusyshyn, who connected on three field goals in the first half as the Argos moved into a 16-10 lead, missed on three key second-half attempts and had to settle for two singles on those occasions.

Blues get new players and triumph on road

Victoria Blues have picked up some extra bodies for their battle for the Northern Division pennant race in Northwest League baseball.

Paul Stevens, a 26-year-old infielder-outfielder, has been signed as a player coach while Eric Snider, a righthander from Washington State University, has been picked up to bolster the pitching corps.

More good news came on the medical front when it was learned catcher Don Hyman will not be lost to the team.

Hyman had been hit with a pitch and was feared out for the season with a broken arm. The most recent diagnosis, however, is just a bad bruise.

Blues defeated the A's in Medford, Ore., 8-6 Wednesday night and Hyman saw duty from the fourth inning on.

Coe and Smith last Island hope

VANCOUVER — Dawn Coe and Joanne Smith are left to carry the colors for Vancouver Island in the B.C. women's golf championship.

Coe, a resident of Lake Cowicahan and member of both March Meadows and Cowichan Golf Clubs, defeated Paula Phillips of Vancouver 3 and 2 in the opening round of match play Wednesday at Shaugnessy Golf Club while Smith of Royal Colwood edged Patty Grant of Prince George on the 21st hole.

They were the only two Islanders to survive as Dorothy De Girolamo, the 1975 B.C. champion from Gorge Vale, was upset on the 20th hole by Jane Cousins of Vancouver.

Pat Derry of Colwood, the only other Island competitor in the 16-player championship flight, lost 2 and 1 to Val Westall of Vancouver Marine Drive.

In other matches: Medalist Gail Moore of Vancouver thumped Lorraine McKenzie of Marine Drive 5 and 4; Flo McFall of Quilchena edged Janie Geety of Vancouver 2 and 1; Lynn Cook of Vancouver beat Lora Iwasaki of Vancouver 4 and 3; and Lisa Young of Prince George beat Val Young of Marine Drive 5 and 4.

Today Moore plays McFall, Cook takes on Smith, Coe plays Cousins and Young meets Westell.

No semi-final upsets in city tennis action

There were no surprises in the Victoria City Open Tennis Tournament Wednesday as top seeds gained final berths at Oak Bay Tennis Club.

Peter Smythe and Russ Hartley advanced to the men's singles final and Enid Jackson and Sandra Moss advanced to the women's singles final.

All finals will be played Saturday at Oak Bay with A events starting at 1 p.m.

Smythe, seeded first defeated unseeded Art McCracken 6-1, 6-0 while Hartley, seeded second, defeated third seed Martin Taylor 3-6, 6-3, 7-3.

Jackson, the top women's seed, downed fifth-seeded Valerie Brice 6-1, 6-3 while Moss, seeded second, defeated unseeded Damaris Hurley 4-6, 6-3, 6-4.

In a men's doubles semi-final, Hartley and Taylor combined to defeat Peter Smythe and Mike Sheikh 6-4, 3-6, 6-2 while in a women's semi-final Wendy Cuppage and Ann Graham beat Andrea Wiles and Moss 6-3, 6-4.

Jorgensen completes long road back

Colonist-N.Y. Times Service

NEW YORK — Mike Jorgensen remembers being wheeled into the intensive-care unit "with all those nurses standing around me." He also remembers the pitch that hit him behind the ear, giving him a blood clot, and he also remembers his lack of aggressiveness when he tried to play baseball again last year.

Some players never get over being hit in the head. Either their vision is impared, or their reflexes are altered, or they move their feet six vital inches farther from home plate. But Mike Jorgensen, with a new spiritual outlook on his career, has cast aside those memories this season while batting a valuable .287 for the New York Mets.

Last week when a pitch sailed at his head, he responded with a sudden fury that touched off a brawl with the Montreal Expos that may produce bad blood between the two teams the rest of this season.

Even if Jorgensen had not responded angrily, John Stearns and other Mets would still have rushed the mound because, as Joe Torre, manager of the Mets, puts it: "my guys know what Mike went through."

A curly-haired blond from Bayside, a few minutes from Shea Stadium, Jorgensen played with the Mets in parts of three seasons before moving on to Montreal, Oakland and Texas where he thought he had found a home at first base and in the open suburbs of Arlington. The kid from Queens now favors smokeless tobacco, cowboy boots and broad cowboy hats.

In May 1979, the new Texan was having a fine start with the Rangers — until May 28, when he was hit behind the right ear by Andy Hassler of Boston. He has no reason to believe Hassler was throwing at him; still, he would have liked Hassler to tell him that — "maybe just a get-well card." The two men have never spoken.

Although suffering headaches, he returned to uniform after the beaning, even pinch-hitting on May 31, but "I complained so much, I got on my wife's nerves, and she told me to see a doctor."

While in the hospital for observation, Jorgensen suffered a seizure from the blood clot, waking up in the intensive-care unit and thinking, "I'm in better shape than the people around me. At least I'm awake."

Jorgensen

While doctors eliminated the clot with medication, Jorgensen says, "I knew I'd play again. Maybe the average person would say, 'the hell with this,' but professional athletes refuse to admit this to themselves."

Nevertheless, while taking medicine, his body weak, his vision shaky, Jorgensen never drove in a run the rest of the season, playing only 49 more games and seeing his average fall to .223. He says nobody treated him with pity, as a player whose career was jeopardized, but at the end of the season the Rangers unloaded him to the Mets.

"I was upset, not because it was the Mets but because it was a sign the end was coming closer. When you're young, you think you should play every day til you're 35 or 40. Then all of a sudden it's a lot closer."

If this was to be a terminal stage in his career, Jorgensen made up his mind to do it right. In the off season he resumed a form of self hypnosis he had learned when the Rangers had hired a team psychologist.

"I'd lie down, staying totally conscious, in a mental state where I could picture myself doing certain things. I'd project goals for myself. I'd imagine myself stroking the ball to left center, having the ball hit the fence on one bounce."

When he was younger, Jorgensen had tried to power everything to right field. At 31, he recognized his best stroke was to left center, and that he would be playing only against right-handed pitching. How did he accept this role?

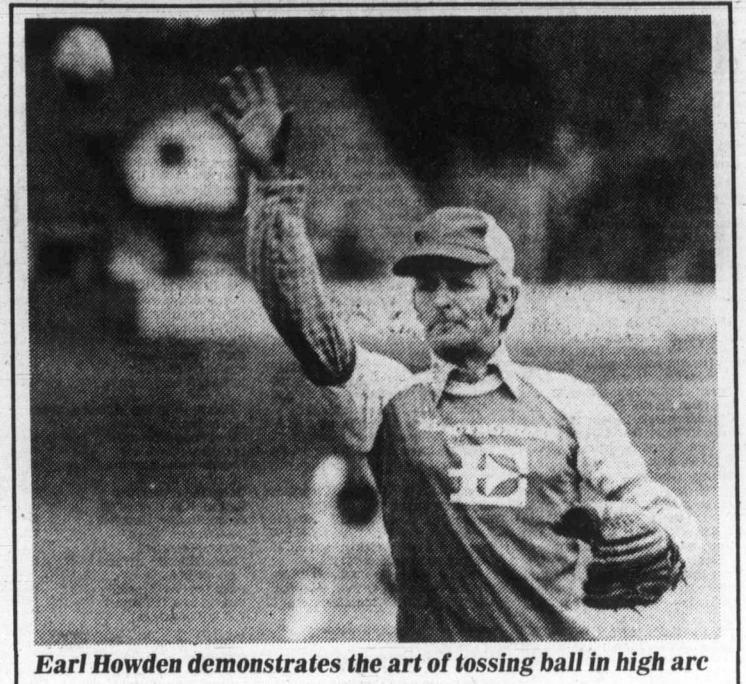

"Since the injury, I've had a different way of looking at things," he said Wednesday.

Last Friday Jorgensen came to bat after Joel Youngblood had hit a homer to put the Mets ahead. With two strikes, Bill Gullickson fired a pitch "that would have hit me in the head if I hadn't moved pretty darn fast."

Getting up from the dust, Jorgensen strode toward the mound, looking as if he were ready to fight. He says, "I was just telling him there are plenty of ways to throw at me without throwing at my head."

After the teams brawled and Stearns was ejected, Jorgensen had to go back and hit. He has always admired Tony Perez, Tommie Agee and Steve Henderson as three men who could bounce back from a dusting with a base hit. His single off Gullickson was as pleasing a hit as anything he has done.

A few innings later, Jorgensen called Gullickson on the telephone from one clubhouse to the other. He says: "I told him I wasn't going to fight him, I just wanted to forget about it. We agreed there are no hard feelings between the two of us. Maybe I overreacted. I've never done anything like that before. I'm not very fond of that incident. I don't want to hurt anybody. I don't want anybody to hurt me."

Earl Howden demonstrates the art of tossing ball in high arc

Slowpitch softball a hit with recreational crowd

By REG REYNOLDS
Colonist staff

They call it slowpitch but a more apt name might have been highpitch.

The ball does go pretty slow but the most unique thing about this version of softball is that the pitcher must throw the ball high.

It must have a minimum three foot arc when it leaves the pitcher's hand and usually the ball is 10-15 feet aboveground in flight.

Once a batter gets used to the arc, the ball is relatively easy to hit.

This makes for an action-packed recreational game with emphasis on defence.

For the batter, the art is to place the ball away from the defences.

Because it's a game that just about anyone can play, slowpitch has caught on with the masses and is a fast-growing pursuit.

It's been big in the United States for a number of years — they even have pro leagues down there — and has been part of the Victoria sports scene for nine years.

The Victoria Slowpitch Association was formed nine years ago and now encompasses approximately 40 teams of about 15 players each.

A rather loosely-knit organization, the VSA teams played a series of exhibition games and then finished off the year with a tournament.

This didn't satisfy the competitive urges of many of the players so this year a new competitive section of 20 teams was formed under the direction of Larry Hamblin, Dan Green and Ken Armstrong.

The teams are split into two divisions and play proper schedules. The top six teams in each division advance to the playoffs. The top team plays the sixth-place team, two plays five and three plays four and the three winners advance in each division advance to the next round.

The team of the three survivors with the best league record advances to the divisional final while the other two clubs play a best-of-three series. The divisional final is also a best-of-three and the division champions meet in another best-of-three series for the overall championship.

Most of the rules are the same as softball but there are no leadoffs and no stealing and a runner can only advance on a basehit or caught ball.

Although he doesn't throw with any velocity, the pitcher is more than just a lobbing machine. He can put spin on the ball to keep the ball from being hit too far and the good pitchers can throw a curveball.

Strikeouts aren't common but they aren't totally unheard of. Hamblin, who pitches and plays first base, says there are usually two or three a game.

Slowpitch is a long way from senior "A" fastball but it's fun and an excellent form of recreation for the guy who's been sitting behind a desk all day in a downtown office tower.

Also it's cheap. Thirty dollars gets an entire team registered.

Reliever makes most of his chance

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — All he asked for was a chance, an opportunity to prove himself.

Kansas City Royals said no. So did Cincinnati Reds.

But Minnesota Twins decided to take a look at this right-handed reliever and now they and Doug Corbett are five victories and eight saves happier for it.

"I always imagined the big leagues would be like this," said Corbett, who has pitched so well for the Twins this year that Calvin Griffith, owner of the American League baseball team, and manager Gene Mauch saw fit to give Mike Marshall his walking papers early in the season.

Corbett, a former star at the University of Florida, was drafted in 1974 by the Royals, but lasted only one year in the Kansas City organization.

He was claimed by the Reds and toiled successfully in their minor league system for five years. But his brilliant statistics were ignored by the Reds, who never asked Corbett to training camp.

"I went to spring training with them a grand total of none," smiled Corbett, whose 2.15 earned-run average is second best in the AL.

Even though Kansas City and Cincinnati found a way, it's nearly impossible to ignore Corbett's minor league record.

His ERA's since 1974 have been 2.95, 1.99, 2.76, 2.22, 1.48 and 3.00. His innings-pitched have exceeded his hits-allowed in all but one of his six minor league seasons, and he has never issued more walks than strikeouts.

That's pretty solid pitching for anyone to pass over, Corbett, a native of Sarasota, never understood his employer's reluctance.

"They never gave me a reason; never said anything concrete," Corbett said of the Reds. "I've always been respectful of people in positions of authority but there were times when I've questioned decisions, especially when I saw guys being promoted in our organization who I felt were not the calibre of pitcher I was.

"I can only speculate that the Reds wanted an overhand, 90-mile an hour pitcher. I'm a sinker-ball pitcher. They wanted pop-ups and strikeouts. I gave them ground balls."

In 71 innings for the Twins, Corbett has allowed 56 hits. His strikeout-to-walk ratio is 3-to-1. He has become the club's stopper, the pitcher Mauch gives the ball to when the game is on the line.

"You can't get along without people who know how to pitch the eighth and ninth innings," said Mauch. "I'd hate to think where we'd be without Doug."

Last winter, Corbett pitched one month for former Twins' manager Cal Ermer in the Puerto Rican League, where he had a 6-2 record, 2.02 earned run average and 13 saves in 29 games.

That was all Ermer needed to see.

Coaches depart

University of Victoria's athletic department is looking to fill two vacancies on its coaching staff, following the resignations of Jenny John and Chris Marshall.

John, UVic women's field hockey coach, will concentrate on her duties as development co-ordinator for the B.C. Field Hockey Association. She was forced to abandon the UVic position because of a heavy work load and travel commitments.

She took over the Vikettes in September 1978, reaching the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union national semi-finals once and capturing the Vancouver Island League title during the past season.

Marshall, who replaced Al Scott as Viking volleyball coach last year, piloted UVic to a fifth-place finish in the Canada West conference. He will return to Vancouver to continue his education.

Replacements will be announced at a later date.

Deal killed

Lorenz Hilkes has killed a North American Soccer League deal that would have had him move from Edmonton Drillers to Toronto Blizzard. Hilkes said Wednesday he won't report to the Blizzard but will return home to West Germany.

Hilkes, 29, was the leading Edmonton scorer last season with 13 goals and three assists in 21 games.

Double win for Shenton

Rick Shenton was a double winner Wednesday as Lumberworld outslugged Capital Radiators in Cosmoplitan Senior Baseball League play at Lambrick Park.

Don Holmes stroked a game-winning two-run double in the 10th inning as Lumberworld completed a game postponed earlier with a 5-4 victory and he went three-for-three as Lumberworld outscored Capitals 16-9 in the regular game.

Shenton won the first game in relief and took the second, despite giving up a grand-slam homer to Wayne Proceviat.

In the firt game Capitals went ahead with a run in the tenth but Lumberworld came back when Shenton reached on an error, Russ Holmes walked and then Don Holmes doubled.

Gary Brooke had four hits for Lumberworld in the second game and Russ Holmes clouted a two-run homer.

Capital Rads	001 000 200 1—	4 4 2
Lumberworld	001 100 100 2—	5 9 0

Dale Aune 6-6 and Randy Johnson; Rick Shenton, Brian Meadmore (7), Shenton 2-3 (9) and Don Holmes.

Lumberworld	051 323 2—	16 20 3

Shenton 3-3 and Don Holmes; Kevin Gill 2-1, Randy Strandlund (7) and Jeff Owens. HRs: Lum — Russ Holmes (3); Caps — Wayne Proceviat (4).

Cole still hot from Budget win

Fresh from the biggest win of his career, Larry Cole was in peak form at Central Park Wednesday night.

Cole, who pitched Victoria Budgets to victory over the U.S. champions in one of four senior "A" games last weekend, fired a one-hitter as Tally-Ho blanked Juan de Fuca Builders 1-0 in a Stuffy McGinnis Men's League softball game.

The journeyman electrician struck out eight and walked three and the only hit was a one-out single by Rick Emerson in the second inning.

Cole also singled and doubled in three trips but the run he needed came in the fifth inning when Kevin Gilbert doubled with two out, advanced on an error and scored on another error.

In the other game at Central Park, Labatts jumped into fifth place by virtue of a 3-2 win over Tod-Hackett Construction.

The score was 2-2 until the sixth inning when Rick Adams led off with a double, advanced on a sacrifice by Dale Marshall and scored on a groundout by winning pitcher Bob Richdale.

Richdale went the distance and although he struggled early he set them down in order in the last three innings.

Barry Underwood hit a two-run homer for Labatts and added a single while Tom Robertson and Bob Wheeler scored the Tod-Hackett runs.

In the Victoria—Saanich Women's League, Butler Bros. demonstrated that playing in the Canadian natives championships had helped their game.

Gina Olson pitched a five-hitter and Sabrina Black went two-for-three at the plate as Butler Bros. upset first-place Island Dryco Breakers 5-3.

It was the second straight loss for Breakers who were unbeaten in their first 16 games.

Butler Bros. finished second in the Canadian natives tournament behind Nanaimo.

Marilyn Bolton pitched a three-hitter, striking out five and walking none, as Bemister's Welding downed Victoria Athletics 3-1 in the other game at Hyacinth Park.

Sue Ondre had two hits and drove in two runs for Bemister's and Jan Nowell had two hits and drove in the winning run.

In the Heywood Men's League, Marv Carver was tagged for seven hits but managed a shutout as Capital Builders blanked Strathcona Hotel 2-0 at Heywood Avenue Park.

Losing pitcher Ken Greenhalg blanked Capital on four hits through six innings and had two out in the seventh inning when the roof fell in. Carver kept things alive with a single and John Coccioni followed with a home run.

In the Macdonald Park Men's League: Mayfair Insurance outscored Mega-Power 10-7; and The Rebels thumped James Bay Inn 13-2.

Rowing crew requires helping hand with trip

HAMILTON (CP) — A lightweight eight crew from the Leander Boat Club, Hamilton, will represent Canada at the world rowing championships next month — provided it can come up with about $20,000 to pay its own way.

"Sport Canada has never sponsored junior or lightweight crews," says Leander president Claude Saunders. "It can't see the continuity from junior and lightweight to the elite heavyweight division."

Killanin and IOC can't sidestep Olympic red tape

MOSCOW (AP) — Lord Killanin arrived Wednesday in Moscow to preside over the boycott-stricken Olympic Games and said the Soviet Union and the United States shared one thing in common — bureaucracy.

The president of the International Olympic Committee said at a news conference at Moscow's new airport that he will be looking into complaints that some American reporters were still awaiting visas to cover the Games, which open July 19.

Killanin glanced at Ignaty Novikov, a deputy prime minister of the Soviet Union and president of the Moscow organizing committee, who was sitting beside him, and said:

"I hope president Novikov will not consider me facetious if I say that the IOC has been sandwiched between two major powers.

"I have discovered in the last few months that the one thing the major powers have in common is bureaucracy."

Killanin said he had spoken briefly with Monique Berlioux, director of the IOC, since stepping off the plane and understood most of the administrative problems surrounding the Moscow Games had been resolved.

But the IOC still has the problem of more than 30 American newspapermen and television and radio reporters who have not received their visas. The U.S. Olympic Committee was reported to be late in applying for them.

The executive board of the IOC meets this weekend, prior to the full session of the IOC starting Monday. The supreme ruling body of the Games has a little more than a week to iron out accreditations and other matters.

Meanwhile, Killanin made a cynical reference to a scientific conference on sport in contemporary society, which starts today in the U.S.S.R.

"My understanding is that this conference is being attended by the United States, Canada, Japan and West Germany," Killanin said. "It makes you very cynical, when you are a sportsman."

All four countries have joined the boycott of the Olympic Games, called by President Jimmy Carter following the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan."

Killanin called on reporters gathering in Moscow to remember the meaning of the Olympic Games.

"We are here for a sporting event, and to report about sports," he said.

He repeated what he told President Leonid Brezhnev in the Kremlin two months ago — that there is no political significance in staging the Olympics in the Soviet Union.

"The Games were awarded to Moscow because of the Soviet Union's contribution to international sport," he said, "Not for any political reasons."

Athletes from about 85 countries are expected to participate in the Games. The IOC recognizes national Olympic committees in 146 countries, all of which are entitled to send competitors.

Boycott gives Soviets big edge

MOSCOW (AP) — From glamorous gymnast Nelli Kim to gargantuan basketball player Vladimir Tkachenko, the host Soviet Union's 560 Olympians comprise the largest and most formidible team at the 1980 Moscow summer Games.

Of 609 medals in 21 athletic disciplines to be awarded in Moscow, the Soviets could take one-third of the total, roughly 200 medals, observers believe.

Medal leaders at the last two Olympics, in Montreal and Munich, the Soviets are practically assured their biggest haul because of the boycott by the United States.

Canada, West Germany, Japan and dozens of other countries joined the U.S.-led boycott, depriving the Moscow Olympics of considerable athletic prestige and propaganda value to the Kremlin.

"As at Montreal, the real favorites for the medals at the 22nd Games will come from the U.S.S.R. and the German Democratic Republic," Sergei Pavlov, first deputy chairman of the organizing committee, told Pravda, the Communist Party daily.

At the 1976 Montreal games, the Soviets led the standings with 47 golds and 125 medals over all, followed by East Germany with 40 golds and 90 medals and the United States, 34 golds and 94 medals.

A number of sports are likely to be grimly contested by foreign athletes in Moscow, Pavlov said.

Among them he named Cuba's boxers and track and field team, Romania's woman gymnasts, the Czechoslovak soccer team and Bulgaria's wrestlers and weight lifters.

The Soviets will field traditionally strong teams in men's and women's gymnastics, women's track and field, both basketball competitions, men's weightlifting and wrestling.

Soviet men swimmers, who have never won an Olympic gold medal, are certain to benefit from the U.S. boycott, as are Soviet judokas from the absence of the Japanese and host team boxers and equestrian entrants from the lack of top western contenders.

But without Tracy Caulkins and Cynthia Woodhead, two American acquatic stars, and Tracey Wickham of Australia, women's swimming could turn into an East German sweep — a potential source of embarrassment for the Soviets who have been unable catch up to East Germany in this sport.

Soccer is another sport in which the Soviets are the underdogs against Eastern European teams. East Germany won the gold medal at Montreal and could repeat in Moscow, although Czechoslovakia is rated the favorite.

Here is a rundown of the Soviet entries in major Olympic events:

Track and field — World record holder Sergei Litvinov and Montreal gold medalist Yuri Sedykh provide a one-two punch in the hammer throw, Konstantin Volkov recently cleared 5.69 meters in pole vault, Leonid Moseyev is European marathon champion and Viktor Myasnikov is a top prospect in hurdles.

Soviet women have a shot at more golds medals than the men. Sprinter Lyudmila Kondratyeva recently set the world record of 10.87 seconds in 100 metres, Nadezhda Olizarenko tied the 800-metre world record set by Tatyana Kazankina, a double gold medallist at Montreal who is still in top form.

Yekaterina Podkopayeva with the season's world-best clocking in 1,500 metres and European champion Giana Romanova in 3,000 metres are top prospects, along with pentathlon world record holder Olga Kuragina, who will benefit from the absence of Diane Jones Konihowski of Edmonton.

Gymnastics — Nikolai Andrianov, winner of four gold medals at Montreal, and world all-round champion Alexander Dityatin are expected to lead the men to their first Olympic team title since 1956 in the absence of the Japanese, team winners in the last five games.

Eurasian beauty Nelli Kim and Natalya Shaposhnikova lead the powerful women's team against Nadia Comaneci and her Romanian team-mates in a replay of their dramatic Montreal duels.

Basketball — Hulking centre Vladimir Tkachenko, 7-feet-5, and playmaker Sergei Belov are the stars of the Soviet men's team, which expects tough competition from Cuba, Brazil and Yugoslavia for the gold medal.

Ulyana Semenova, a 7-foot Latvian, leads the women's team that has no serious rivals without the U.S. women taking part.

Boxing — Blanked in gold medals at Montreal, the Soviets seem certain to pick up a few titles in Moscow, but competition will be strong from Cuban and other Eastern bloc fighters.

Fencing — The Soviets won six of eight gold medals at the world championships earlier this year against the best Western swordsmen and should surpass the three gold medals earned at the 1976 Olympics.

Swimming — Vladimir Salnikov, world record holder in 400 and 800-metre freestyle, would be a gold medal favorite even if the Americans were competing, and half a dozen teammates rate among Europe's best. The Soviet men are almost certain to pick up their first Olympic titles in Moscow.

Yulia Bogdanova in the 100-metre breaststroke is the top Russian woman swimmer, but the team lacks enough depth to derail the powerhouse East German women.

The Soviets also are expected to be strong in wrestling and weightlifting events. Equestrian, yachting, canoeing, cycling and shooting are expected to be dominated by the Soviets and other Eastern bloc countries because of the boycott.

Format change adopted

VIENNA (Reuter) — The International Tennis Federation adopted a proposal Wednesday to change the Davis Cup into a two-tier competition with a 16-country top group and the rest playing in zones.

The annual general meeting of the ITF approved the proposal, submitted by the ITF management committee, by a 35-13 margin.

An ITF spokesman said the meeting also approved, in principle, China's readmission into the federation and that discussions were continuing with Taiwan.

Under the new Davis Cup format, the world's top 16 tennis countries will meet in a knockout tournament every year, while the rest will battle it out in zones groups for promotion to the premier division.

Each year, four teams — two European, one Asian and one American — will be promoted to the top group and four others relegated.

The ITF hopes it will make the competition more interesting for the major tennis powers, giving them more varied competition, while giving more incentive to the others.

The top eight teams will be seeded, which should prevent the strongest teams meeting each other in the first round, as has happened in the past.

Other advantages of the new system are that it will be played in a single calendar year and will occupy only four weeks.

Austria submitted a compromise proposal based on soccer's World Cup tournament with the winners of 16 zone groups advancing to the finals. This was rejected by the meeting.

An ITF spokesman said most of the major tennis countries supported the ITF proposal. One exception was Australia, which felt the present setup was satisfactory.

Selection to the top group for 1981 will be based on performances in this year's tournament — meaning that the four semifinalists from the European zones and the Asian and American semifinalists will qualify.

Fans supporting Mexican walkout

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican baseball league players who have staged a nine-day walkout say they have received almost $13,000 in cash donations from fans all over the country.

"We are being flooded with gifts from almost everybody," said Rene Chavez, a board member of the National Association of Baseball Players (ANABE).

Association members have practically halted the league in support of Mexico City Tigers catcher Vicente Peralta, who claims he was fired by his club for being a member of the organization.

The walkout has affected 14 of the 20 league teams.

The league decided last Sunday to cut the season short and reopen a new one with only six teams this week. The league does not recognize the ANABE that has almost 300 Mexican members.

Future beckoning to Beckenbauer

By HELENE ELLIOTT
Colonist Newsday Service

NEW YORK — Now the clues add up:

● Franz Beckenbauer, lying on the trainer's table in Giants Stadium nearly four months ago, saying he would play two or three more years "if I can play my position." If he could be a sweeper, not a midfielder, as the Cosmos had made of him. Yet, he said, as long as Carlos Alberto was playing for the Cosmos, "there is no way for me to go back to sweeper, and I don't want to."

● Alberto, a well-preserved 36, signing a one-year extension of his contract in March. For months, he told no one but Beckenbauer.

● Beckenbauer, admittedly distracted in recent weeks by having to choose between staying with the Cosmos or leaving for Hamburg, a week ago was in total command on the field and completely relaxed after the Cosmos' 3-0 victory over the Vancouver Whitecaps.

● Beckenbauer, waiting for his luggage to appear on the carousel at Kennedy Airport last week, smudges under his eyes showing how a boisterous card game had kept him awake during the transcontinental flight home, saying he had been doing this for 17 years. "You must think I'm crazy," he said, smiling. "And this," a sweep of his hand taking in the scene of his bleary-eyed teammates stumbling to the team bus. "This is craziest. But it has been fun."

STILL, NO ONE COULD KNOW for sure that Beckenbauer had chosen to end his association with the Cosmos when his contract expires Oct. 31. Not until the next day, when he announced he had accepted an offer from Hamburg SV in his native Germany, could anyone know what Beckenbauer was thinking. Though he has played parts of four seasons here, very few people really know Franz Beckenbauer.

Since February, when a semi-joking proposal by Hamburg officials became a serious offer, guessing whether Beckenbauer would stay or go was the official Cosmos game. Reports from here and abroad said Beckenbauer was definitely going to Hamburg, that he was on the verge of signing a two-year contract with the Cosmos, that he had no idea of what to do. Cosmos coach Hennes Weisweiler, whom Beckenbauer helped recruit, said in late April: "it is better for him to remain here. He has not signed, but he will."

HE DID NOT. Beckenbauer, who will be 35 in September, surprised Weisweiler and most of his teammates by turning down a more lucrative offer from the Cosmos and agreeing to go to Hamburg. His contract is for two European seasons and will run from November 1980 to May 1982. It is worth about $450,000 per season, compared to the $600,000 he earns with the Cosmos. But he has a lifetime contract with Adidas guaranteeing him financial security and freedom to try a managerial position in soccer. Had he stayed here, Adidas would not have extended Beckenbauer's contract to be its spokesman beyond 1985.

"Normally, if you think about all the negatives and positives, I don't move," he said. "But the main reason is not soccer, it's my future. I think I have more possibilities in Europe than in the United States. I have only — God willing — two years to go and then I am finished. I don't have to think too much about the two years. It's the 20 after that."

HE IS SET APART on the field by his ability and off the field by choice. A high school dropout who briefly worked as an apprentice at an insurance company, Beckenbauer passes much time on the road in his single room alone with a book.

"Maybe 10 years ago I would spend a lot of time playing cards, going to Western movies or crime movies," he said, "but that is wasted time. I would rather read a good book or magazine so I could learn more. I spend so much time with my teammates on the field, on the bus, in the lockerroom that I don't want to stay at the bar one hour with them. What they talk is 99 percent nonsense. I get a cramp. It is better I don't go."

He has no real friends on the Cosmos. The man who comes closest is Alberto, who occupies the position Beckenbauer would like to play and who, by rights, should be his enemy. "We understand each other like brothers," Beckenbauer said.

"HE WAS BORN in Brazil, I was born in Germany, but we have the same mentality." Alberto expected Beckenbauer to leave. "I knew. He told me three months ago and I wrote it in my column," said Alberto, who writes for a Brazilian newspaper. "The idea was that I would play for just this year and when I stopped, he would play sweeper. But I felt I could play another year and signed a contract in March.

"I'd like Franz to stay with us but the life here of soccer is so terrible. One day we are here, another day there. I will miss him."

His bearing is self-assured, the near-arrogance of the supremely talented athlete. That is, he says, a front.

"It looks like I'm sure, but I am always. . . I never had too much self confidence. Inside it is different. I wish sometimes I have more confidence." He is genuinely worried about failing in Hamburg. By the time he joins the club (he plans a vacation and doesn't expect to play before December or January), it will be nearly four years since he played in the Bundesliga. Beckenbauer was — and still is — a German folk hero. He led the great Bayern Munich teams to four Bundesliga championships, three European Cups, four German Cups, a Cup-Winners Cup and a World Club title.

HE LED GERMANY to the 1974 World Cup championship in front of home fans in Munich. Though others played sweeper before him, it was Beckenbauer who carried it to the ultimate by transforming it into an offensive weapon. With his quickness and vision on the field, he was superb.

He easily carried his success to the North American Soccer League. He was voted the NASL's most valuable player in his first season, 1977, its best midfielder the next two seasons and an all-star all three seasons.

Outwardly, there is little difference between the Beckenbauer of Germany and here. The body is still trim at 5 feet 11 and 167 pounds. The curly hair is a bit more sparse and shows a few gray strands, and the right leg carries a scar from a 1979 operation to remove cartilage from his knee.

HE IS NOT THE SAME, and he knows it. "Going back is a big risk. I don't know if I'm able to bring that (level of) performance," he said. "People expect more than 10 years ago — they expect a lot. I'm ambitious enough and not afraid. I know the quality of play there. But I think I can do it playing on normal grass, in normal weather (Europeans teams don't play in the summer) and one game a week, which is important at my age."

Because he could run and Alberto could not, Beckenbauer was transformed into a midfielder by then-coach Eddie Firmani in July 1977. American fans have never really known Beckenbauer at his best position. "Sometimes I get frustrated. I have a guy following me for 90 minutes, some second-division English player, and I can't make any space. I'm out of the game," he said. "My teammates cannot give me the ball because I am not free. My ability is to make space, get and give balls. I couldn't do this at midfield." Hamburg, he said, did not sign him "to be a left wing."

THAT HE CAN BE a sweeper again must mean a lot to him, though he cited the security provided by Adidas as being most important. But it is difficult to know Beckenbauer's thoughts. He certainly wants to be closer to his sons, Thomas, 16, Michael 13 and Stephan, 11, who live in Munich with their mother, from whom Beckenbauer is separated. But he is loath to give up his cherished privacy, the anonymity that allows him to sample restaurants or stroll unnoticed in Manhattan.

And he is not sure he has finished one of the missions he came here to accomplish. "Soccer is not in yet in this country," he said. "Pele started it but what you need is real superstars, not superstars they make in the papers. How long is the question. I don't know how patient people in America will be if it takes 10 years."

More patient, he hopes, than he is. Rebuffed in attempts to help his younger teammates on the field, he said, "I save my words. It only makes me more frustrated." But that frustration, the anger that makes him so often shrug, or fling his hands in the air, is not wh at is driving him to leave. "In Germany, I do that 10 times a game. You don't know me."

No one does. And now no one here ever will.

Hart pays tribute at Denny funeral

MONTREAL (CP) — Friends, relatives and former boxing colleagues crowded into a suburban funeral home Wednesday to pay their final respects to lightweight boxer Cleveland Denny.

The 24-year-old Denny, who made his home in the Montreal suburb of Lachine after emigrating from Guyana in 1972, died Monday morning, succumbing to head injuries suffered in a lightweight title bout against Gaetan Hart of Quebec at Olympic Stadium June 20.

More than 150 people gathered around Denny's open coffin as Anglican and Pentecostal ministers Don Leatherman and Lewis Massarelli called for love and solidarity among family members in the face of Denny's death.

Hart, whose flurry of blows in the final seconds of the 10th round sent Denny into a coma from which he never recovered, stood near the coffin.

He arrived about five minutes before the brief ceremony and walked solemnly to view Denny amid the flash of cameras.

Hart, his eyes red and moist from crying, bowed his head as Mr. Massarelli spoke of "forgiving all our enemies."

The 27-year-old Hart, who placed his title belt inside Denny's coffin, had first approached Denny's 24-year-old widow, Clarine, and her father and said, "I'm sorry, believe me, I'm sorry."

At first she showed no sign of emotion but when Hart repeated the words Denny's widow offered a faint acknowledgement.

Hart is reported to have offered the purse from his next fight to Denny's family.

Hart and his manager, Andy Nadon, decided to visit the funeral home after assurances from the Denny family that Hart was welcome. Hart at first feared reprisals from the family, but there were no incidents Wednesday.

Ken Philadelphia, representing the Guyanese government, was the first to speak to the overflow crowd. Curious onlookers lined both sides of the street in front of the funeral home.

"We knew Cleveland as a very fine boxer," he said. "We weren't here to see him fight but we were following it. We were all proud of him. Today he is gone but we shall remember him."

Names and games

Leos lose two starters

B.C. LIONS have lost two stars to injuries following their 39-24 win Tuesday night over Saskatchewan Roughriders.

Officials of the CFL club said Wednesday middle linebacker Sam Britts, who suffered a separated shoulder, will be out for the remainder of the season. He was to be operated on today.

Wide-receiver Tyron Gray had a hamstring torn from the bone and was operated on Wednesday. It was not known how long he will be out.

★ ★ ★

QUARTERBACK KEN JOHNSON, who suffered a hand injury in Calgary Stampeders' CFL season opener Tuesday night in Ottawa against the Rough Riders, is not expected to miss any action.

Coach Ardell Wiegandt said that while he's still awaiting the results of an x-ray on Johnson's hand, he expects the Stampeders' No. 1 quarterback to be able to practise this week and be ready for the team's next game here Tuesday against Montreal Alouettes.

MAC WILKINS smashed the American national discus record Wednesday with a heave of 70.98 metres (232 feet, 10½ inches), the world's longest toss this year at the Helsinki World Games track and field competitions.

Wilkins, who will not go to the Moscow Olympics because of the United States boycott, twice bettered the stadium record at Stockholm's Olympic stadium two days ago, winning with a toss of 69.45 metres.

★ ★ ★

DEBBIE BRILL of Aldergrove, won the high jump Wednesday at an international track and field meet in Visby, Sweden, with a leap of 1.85 metres.

★ ★ ★

GERRIE KNETEMANN of the Netherlands won the 12th stage of the Tour de France bicycle race Wednesday, while defending champion Bernard Hinault finished far back but retained the over-all lead.

Belgians Ludo Peeters and Jean-Luc Vandenbroucke were second and third in the 193-kilometre (121 miles) stage Wednesday between Agen and the foothills of the Pyrenees Mountains.

★ ★ ★

CANADA QUALIFIED for the final round of the Galea Cup international team tennis tournament Wednesday with a 3-2 victory over Denmark.

Canada led 2-1 entering the final day's play and won the Zone B final when Martin Wostenholme of Ottawa beat Michael Mortensen 7-5, 6-2.

THE INTERNATIONAL Tennis Federation has rejected a Romanian appeal against a Davis Cup ban on Ilie Nastase.

Nastase was suspended from Romania's remaining Davis Cup matches this season and all of next year's competition because of incidents during Romania's Cup tie last month with Britain in Bristol, England.

Nastase made vulgar gestures, swore at some of the officials and was twice publicly warned by Norwegian referee Cato Vik during the deciding match of the tie against John Feaver.

★ ★ ★

STEWARDS AT the Detroit Race Course suspended jockey John Rupert for six months Wednesday following a controversial race — the second such suspension in two days.

Rupert, 21, was suspended for a "flagrantly unsatisfactory ride" on Foxie Pleasure during a perfecta race July 3, a DRC spokesman said.

★ ★ ★

PITCHER DENNIS MARTINEZ, who made his last start May 8, was reactivated Wednesday by Baltimore Orioles.

To make room for Martinez, the American League baseball club announced that pitcher Joe Kerrigan has been optioned to Rochester of the International League.

THE ALPINE SECTION of the Canadian Ski Association announced Wednesday the appointment of two national coaches.

Luc Robillard of Quebec City and Don Lyon of Ottawa were named to work with Canada's slalom and giant slalom competitors.

Champ dumped

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — The defending champion and two other seeded players were eliminated in a series of upsets Wednesday as the Hall of Fame tennis tournament entered its second round.

Brian Teacher, the defending champion in the $100,000, grass-court event, lost to Billy Martin.

Third-seeded Tim Gullikson was beaten by Andrew Pattison, and No. 6 seed Peter Rennert was trounced by Bernie Mitton in other singles matches Wednesday.

Teacher, seeded second, started strongly but fell to Martin, who used his two-handed backhand to fight back, 4-6, 7-5, 6-4.

Gullikson also started strongly but Pattison charged back to win 2-6, 6-3, 7-5.

Mitton, who won the tournament in 1978 but is unseeded this year, beat Rennert 6-1, 6-2.

No. 4 seed Vijay Amritraj had a tough time with Colin Dibley, who has one of the biggest serves in the game. Dibley won seven of his first eight games with Amritraj, but the 1976 winner came back, 1-6, 6-3, 6-4.

Gretzky
. . . hates tobacco

Baseball, banquets fill Gretzky off-season

BRANTFORD, Ont. (CP) — He's a millionaire and a hockey superstar in the making.

But in these lazy, hazy, days of summer you'll find Wayne Gretzky playing baseball, or attending a banquet, or doing a commercial, or attending a banquet, or playing a charity golf tournament, or attending a banquet, or playing softball, or attending a banquet, or doing a commercial, or. . . .

"I got all these calls in January and I said yes to them all," said Gretzky, 20, who, in his first year in the National Hockey League with Edmonton Oilers, was acclaimed the league's most valuable player and most gentlemanly player, besides finishing as co-leading scorer with Marcel Dionne of Los Angles Kings.

So he keeps his commitments, getting his tonsils removed, attending a banquet here, accepting an award there, doing a commercial somewhere else.

To relax, Gretzky plays junior baseball with Brantford (Ont.) Braves. Of course in the winter, Gretzky relaxes by playing hockey in the NHL.

"They're both just games. I feel the same way about junior baseball as I do about the NHL. I'm relaxed in both of them and I enjoy both of them.

"We all take it seriously. It's just that some players put a lot of pressure on themselves."

Gretzky enjoys playing junior baseball. He also excels at it with a team that has a reputation to uphold — league champions six times and provincial champions twice in the last decade. Having played in eight of the team's 14 games, Gretzky was batting .500.

He realizes that Oilers owner, Peter Pocklington, might be sitting out West keeping his fingers crossed that he doesn't get hurt.

"I'm not insured for this you know. If I get hurt, when we're halfway to the hospital, we've got to make it look like a car crash."

While baseball is a summer relaxant for him, Gretzky loves the game and takes his play seriously.

A local baseball man, Bill Moffat, recalled a time when Gretzky filled in at shortstop for Brantford Red Sox, a senior club.

"We go to Waterloo for the tournament they have at the exhibition they have up there and it comes to the final game. We need a pitcher to face Leaside Leafs and Wayne volunteers.

"Well, you should have seen him. He's throwing his slow curve and keeping it low, and they're just going crazy trying to hit it. The more they go after it, they bigger the grin on his face gets. We wind up beating them, 15-5."

He declined an invitation to work out with the American League Toronto Blue Jays a few weeks ago. But the idea still intrigues him.

"Is it true they only make $600 a month in Medicine Hat?" he asked, referring to the Jays' rookie league farm team in Alberta.

"That's right," he was told. "And they pay their own rent.

"They also get about $7.50 a day to eat."

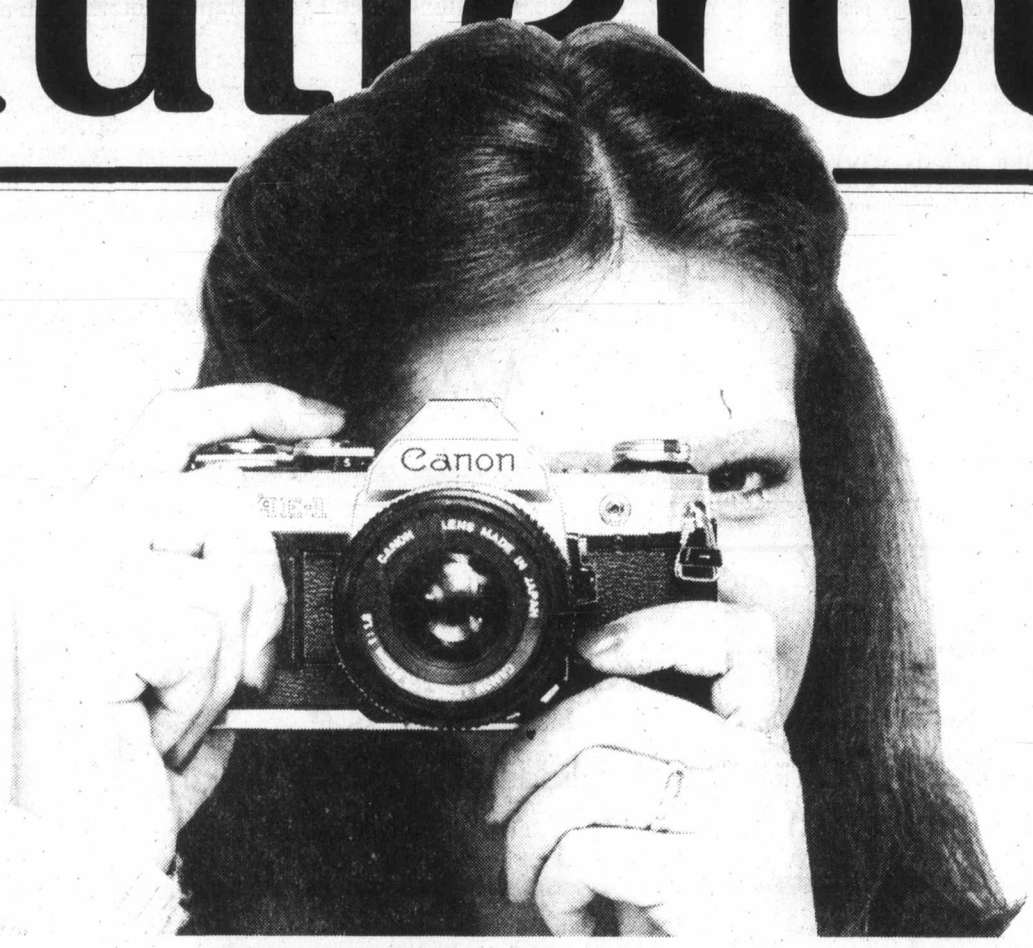

"How do they survive?"

"On chewing tobacco."

"Yuck. I tried it once when I was with the senior team. They had a guy from Pepperdine College on the team and he gave me some. I think it was really snuff. I stuck it in there and spit it right out. Yuck."

Just as well — a tobacco chewing hockey player?

One dollar for juice was last straw for Brothers

Supermarket shopper weighs a purchase—where to draw the line?

The razor's edge tipped on a wing

By ENID NEMY
Colonist-New York Times Service

NEW YORK — It is impossible to get everyone to agree on anything. Except maybe that all prices today are crazy. But where do people draw the line? Most lines are apparently drawn at just about the same place as most tempers are lost. The place, also known as the last straw, is usually small, unimportant, and, relative to everything else, ridiculous.

Take, for instance, the career woman who absolutely refuses to buy chicken wings. That may not sound unusual—chicken wings aren't everyone's idea of a delectable meal. But this woman really loves them, and she can well afford her local supermarket's charge of $1.67 for a package of eight.

"I just can't bring myself to buy them," she said. "I can remember when I was just starting out, and I was on a really tight budget, and I got eight chicken wings for 50 cents. Somehow, I can't pay $1.67."

However, when she wants a steak, she can bring herself to pay the going price, whatever it may be. Figure it out. She can't.

Fernanda Gilligan, who is in charge of public relations for Cartier, and who has both Wanamakers and Kelloggs in her family tree, has resigned herself to the inevitable, when it comes to escalating prices. But the resignation only goes so far. It does not include paper towels.

"I've stopped buying them," she said. "It may sound silly to draw the line at an 80-cent or $1 package of paper towels, but I do. We're back to linen dish towels, and dish cloths."

Dr. Joyce Brothers, the psychologist, might have to do some thinking and budgeting before buying gold or diamonds, but a quarter here or there usually doesn't cause any brow-furrowing.

Still, the other day she stopped to buy a glass of fresh orange juice on the street, and rescinded the order when she heard the price.

"It was $1," she said. "I was used to paying 75 cents, and I just felt, for no reason, that it shouldn't be $1. I wanted it, but I didn't get it."

Maxine Gold, who is with the New York City Commission on the Status of Women, doesn't think twice about calling a friend in Paris or Jamaica. And if she's tired, or her feet hurt, or even if there's no good reason, she'll take a taxi.

"But I won't spend more than $1.39 for pantyhose or stockings," she said. "That's plenty. That's all they should be. That's it for me."

Recently, Mary Lou Andrews, who lives near Chicago, was in New York attending a conference. She isn't usually reckless with money, she said, but she went into Tiffany's and bought a silver pen, just because she wanted one.

And yet, she recalled, at home the previous week, when she wanted two apples, she told the clerk to put them back when she was told the price.

"They were $2," she said. "I had the money, but I just couldn't pay $1 an apple. You have to put your foot down somewhere."

Armand (Ed) Carnevale, the executive vice president of Harry Winston, is as well tailored as he ever was, although his suits have tripled in price.

But when it comes to coffee, a drink he loves, enough is enough, he said. If the price reads more than $3.19 a pound, the coffee stays on the shelf.

"That's my limit," he said, firmly.

Still, whatever the price, Carnevale is never without coffee. If he doesn't buy it at a higher price, his wife does.

"I know when prices go up, she's paying more than $3.19," he said. "It's coming out of my pocket eventually, but not directly."

A woman who recently returned from London, where she paid $65 for a simple lunch for two, said she now uses cotton balls in her compact instead of powder puffs.

"Years ago the little powder puffs were a dime," she said. "Then they went up to a quarter. Now they're two for 89 cents. I just can't do it."

The woman didn't want her name used, even though, according to Dr. Brothers, people generally don't mind admitting certain things "that make them more human."

For example, she said, it's human to balk at the price of liquor, and admit to using cheaper brands. But if anyone ever owned up to pouring unbranded liquor into branded liquor bottles, Dr. Brothers would be one surprised psychologist.

Wisdom spews from a mountain

Desert rat scores on lecture circuit

By CHARLES HILLINGER
Colonist-Los Angeles Times Service

BLACK MOUNTAIN, Calif. — Walter Bickel, who admittedly has only a grade-school education, describes himself as a prospector, miner, mineralogist, geologist, archeologist, anthropologist, astronomer, historian and chemist.

He says he is also prepared to discuss planets, stars, Indians, pre-historic men and unidentified flying objects.

The "prospector-professor," as he calls himself, also claims to be the guardian of this mile-high "sacred" mountain 125 miles north of Los Angeles.

For years "students" of Bickel have been beating a path to the 74-year-old man's ivory tower, which in reality is a tumble-down shack on a half acre littered with broken-down mining equipment, hundreds of jugs of rainwater, battered old cars and trucks, rusting bedsprings, tables piled high with rock samples and a collection of what he calls Stone Age tools.

For Boy Scouts, a visit to the bearded old man is a highlight of their hikes into Last Chance Canyon, where he has lived for 34 years.

"Over 7,000 students have signed my enrollment books," the 6-foot desert rat proudly boasts as he shows off his guest registers.

"Scientists, philosophers, university professors, entire college classes have come out to hear my lectures," Bickel said.

"It's amazing the knowledge this old Kansas farm boy has soaked up out here on the desert."

Bickel lectures on almost any subject that interests his students.

His formal class sessions are held on Saturdays and Sundays, when anywhere from a dozen to 50 visitors show up to listen to the "professor" for three to four hours without a break.

He leads them on hikes over his 160 acres of mining claims, explaining the basics of prospecting before lending them picks and shovels to try their luck —on his claim.

Bickel assures them, "Whatever you find, you keep."

So what's in it for the old man?

"Friendship. Company. Good times. My students bring along good eats, beer, wine and soft drinks," he said.

Outside the one-room shack he shares with 20 cats and two dogs, Bickel has spread a dozen threadbare rugs covered with weather-beaten, overstuffed couches, chairs, beds and rusted bedsprings for his guests.

Giving his version on why Black Mountain is "sacred," Bickel said, "There are 185 stone rings on the mountain, pre-historic campsites, littered with all kinds of Indian artifacts. The Indians have asked me to guard the mountain, to make sure no harm comes to it."

He identified the Indians as Paiutes, Shoshones and Mojaves.

Bickel displays mysterious "ancient ceremonial rocks" and huge stone axes and tools "left behind by a race of giant Stone Age people."

"Scientists tell me humans who used these tools had to have huge hands, must have been at least nine feet tall," he said.

Hanging on a wall in his shack are the paws of a bobcat.

"The bobcat chased one of my cats into the shack at 3 a.m. one day. I was asleep in my underwear and got up fumbling around in the dark looking for my gun," Bickel recalled.

"My cat ran through my legs and the bobcat pounced on me. I hit the bob cat in the face with my fist and knocked him for a loop. I found my gun and killed him before he got me."

Bickel looks back to the Great Depression of the 1930s as the reason for his being here.

"In 1934 my machine shop in Los Angeles went bust, so I high-tailed it out here to make my fortune mining gold," Bickel said.

"But as you can see I never made it. But being rich never would have brought me the pleasures, the knowledge and the good friends this old canyon has."

Bickel shows what he says is a Stone Age tool to visitors at his junk-strewn camp on 'sacred' mountain. He says more than 7,000 students have come to hear him lecture on prospecting—and whatever else they might be interested in.

NO! Learn to use the magic word

Canadian Press

MONTREAL — A Montreal architect had gone through life unable to say no. Then, he took a course in assertiveness and learned to use the magic word.

"I've used it at the office and to my mother, who has spent years manipulating me.

"But my biggest high came last week. I've never been able to take anything back to a store for fear they'd turn me down. I decided the time had come to try.

"I started small. I took something back to The Bay, because I knew they'd take back just about anything. That was easy.

"I practised a few more times, then I took back a pair of shoes I'd worn for three weeks to a small shoe store. The salesman refused point blank, because they were so worn no one else would buy them. But for once in my life I was going to assert myself, and I did.

"Eventually he agreed to take them back as a trade-in on a new pair. It may sound crazy, but I felt from that day forward I was a new man."

Many people find it particularly difficult to say no at work, says Carol Ann Fried, who calls herself a life planning consultant. They may have traditional fear of the consequences, such as getting fired. Or they think that being very busy makes them look efficient.

"In fact, being overloaded gives you a psychological excuse for doing poor work—you've got too much to do any of it well.

"At work, the main thing is to agree on your priorities with your boss. Then you can avoid being taken advantage of by simply saying, 'We agreed that this was a priority today.' "

Fried, who gives courses in assertiveness, says: "Some people never learn that it's OK not to conform to everybody's needs but their own. Our responsibility to others involves being open and honest but not always pleasing them. We have the right to say no.

"The first thing to remember is that if you can't decide, don't answer right away. Take all the time you need. Don't allow yourself to be hassled into a decision you'll regret.

"Don't lie. It's not necessary.

"Say no right away. Once you've said it, it's harder to turn back.

"Be brief. The stronger your statement, the less you give others to hook on to and distract you from your original intent.

"Be firm. A weak no is as good as a yes, it can be interpreted as 'maybe' and invites persuasion. Be calm and don't lose control—that allows others to take over your emotions.

"Be persistent. Continue to evade. People don't always give up right away. Let them know that no means no. Become a broken record.

"Don't whatever you do, justify. You don't need to have excuses if you don't want to. Sometimes the less said the better. Remember it's your perfect right to say no.

"Be prepared. If you know you've got trouble saying no, stand in front of a mirror and practise a little.

THE ACES® IRA G. CORN, JR.

"The truth is that life is delicious, horrible, charming, frightful, sweet, bitter and that it is everything." -- Anatole France.

. . . . . .

The play of a doubled slam can also be all of these things. But the delicious, charming and sweet go only to the side that makes the plus score.

This volatile slam was played in the 1979 World Championships against the Americans by Andrew Reiner of Sydney, Australia.

Had Bill Eisenberg of Los Angeles found a heart lead to begin with, the first round ruff would have left no chance. However, the situation was a highly ambiguous one and it is difficult to criticize West's actual choice.

In any event, declarer played well to make his contract, aided immeasurably by the road map that the defenders' bidding had prepared for him.

West's spade lead was ruffed in dummy and a trump was led to declarer's ace. Another spade was ruffed and dummy's diamond queen was cashed, leaving a trump in the East hand.

A club was led to declarer's queen and declarer's last spade was ruffed with dummy's last trump. Dummy's two high clubs were cashed, declarer discarding a heart and dummy's last club was ruffed.

The trump king drew East's last trump and dummy, West and declarer were left with only the heart suit -- a fact well known to declarer because of West's bid and the subsequent play.

The final thrust came with a low heart lead. West's 10 was allowed to win and the forced heart lead away from West's king netted Australia two more winners and the doubled slam was made.

ANSWER: Four spades. For those who play transfer bids, bid two hearts to make opener bid spades and then make him declarer at the spade game. This will protect him against a damaging lead in one of the minors.

Sleeping apparel a real eye-opener

Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: May I respectfully suggest that before you label someone "squirrelly" you look to see if there is perhaps another side to the story?

The woman who wrote said, "My old goat has been sleeping in his union suit for 45 years." I'd like to know why she is raising a fuss now. Did it occur to her that the man might have poor circulation and is just plain cold?

Twenty-two years ago I suffered a heart attack. Since that time I have slept in flannel pajamas, a wool sweater and socks. I use an electric blanket all year round. My wife has never made fun of me.

I hope the complaining wench will read this letter and ask herself the question you have urged on so many wives before considering separation or divorce. It is this:

"Would your life be better with him or without him?" — No Last Name Please, Just Jim

Dear Jim: Since the letter from that wench appeared, I have received the doggonedest descriptions of weird sleeping apparel. For example: A man in Miami says his wife sleeps in a fur coat, summer and winter, ever since they moved from Minnesota. A woman in Worcester, Mass., says her bald-headed husband sleeps in one of her old turbans from October through May. A mother in Kansas wrote that her son was so thrilled when he made the team he slept in his football helmet for three weeks! The things I learn from my readers!

Dear Ann Landers: I am in a state of depression. Here is why: My husband's cousin who owns a large ranch in Australia has asked him to become his business partner to replace the partner who died suddenly.

Karl is knowledgeable about animals and has a good head on his shoulders. We talked about the offer for a few days and I told Karl I just couldn't bear to leave our home and go live in a strange land on the other side of the world.

Yesterday at dinner Karl dropped the bomb. He has signed the contract, given notice at his place of employment and we are to be in Australia within a month.

Karl is excited about a new life away from the rat race. If I say I won't go, there will be no support money because a woman who refuses to live with her husband is not entitled to anything.

We have had a good marriage until now. Our children are grown, and I am crazy about the grandchildren. I dread the thought of leaving them—not to mention my family and friends and everything I hold dear.

It seems like a bad dream, and it is tearing me apart. Can you say something to help me stop crying? — Wet Handkerchiefs In Indianapolis

Dear Wet: Turn off the waterworks, woman. You are wasting the natural resources. Make up your mind you're going to be equal to the challenge and enjoy the adventure. There's a lot to be said for life "down under," and you may love it.

Humans' disgust for food puzzling

MONTREAL (CP) — Humans are the only species with a natural tendency to lift their noses at food in disgust, says a leading scientist.

"But what makes things disgusting to us is a mystery we're still trying to understand," Prof. Paul Rozin of the University of Pennsylvania told members of the Society for Nutrition Education this week.

"All we know is that it's a very powerful feeling, relating mostly to animals and animal products. But rats, for example, just don't exhibit disgust."

Rozin, advised the society's members to study eating habits according to a client's likes and dislikes and said disgust for such things as insects and feces was an almost universal tendency in humans.

Most preferences, dislikes, aversions and avoidances for foods are acquired socially but vary more within cultures, he added, outlining his own study on chili peppers.

"Although we're biologically built to dislike chili peppers," he said, "continued exposure can lead from dislike to an intense like."

By the age of six or seven, the Mexican children Rozin studied showed a distinct preference over sugar for chili peppers. The younger the child, however, the more he or she opted for sweets.

In most societies, Rozin noted, a person's "innate preference for sweets" is culturally reinforced, whereas likes for substances such as coffee and beer is developed over a period of time for reasons ranging from taste and effects to addiction and social approval.

"But we know very little about what factors make people like or dislike a food," he said. "The only one we've pinned down is nausea."

Nausea, not always caused by the ingested food but later associated with it, results in a sharp and often long-lasting "aversion" to the food in question.

Allergies and foods containing harmful products such as carcinogens, on the other hand, are usually "avoided."

"The critical difference is that if a food causes nausea, it's likely to become an aversion, whereas a food you can't eat is likely to be avoided," he explained.

Disgust, on the other hand, is picked up at a much more subtle level.

"The object is often seen as dirty even though it's never been tasted and is potentially edible," Rozin said.

"Somehow, we guess, parents manage to convey the feeling through facial expressions—a factor absent in asking a child to avoid a poisoned mushroom, for example."

The Society for Nutrition Education includes about 6,000 members who promote nutritional well-being through education, communication and education-related research.

Horse Happenings

By MARILYN McCALL

Oak Meadows on Prospect Lake Road was the scene of an Open English and Children's Horse Show. Open riders competed on one ring, under judge Lindy Townley of Vancouver, and children were judged by Pat Newman in a second ring.

Paul Tregear, riding Spring Lancer, was the open aggregate winner of the day. There were several double winners and one triple winner during the day's events. Shawna Hett, mounted on Alice Bea Fleet, took first place in equitation hunt seat 14 and over, junior working hunter 3'3", and handy working hunter 3'3". Both novice working hunter 3' and working hunter 3' were won by the pair of Cathy Busfield and Ariel. Riding Sunshine Casey, Wendy Thompson placed first in both amateur hunter under saddle and novice working hunter 3'.

OPEN ROAD hack was won by Drena Smith and Dutch Treat. Mounted on Arctic Host, Cathy Totten won novice hunter under saddle. In junior working hunter under saddle, first went to Susanne Stanlake and Victoria Station. English pleasure was won by Wendy May and Flyaway. Riding Hustler's Lady, Gail Jewsbury won show hack. Working hunter 2'6" was won by the pair of Brenda Raileys and Clabbedy Kampe. First in equitation hunt seat under 14 years went to Jill Fletcher, riding High Calibre. Cemmerron was guided to first place in amateur working hunter 3' by Janice Virag. Tracey Madson and Night Owl won regular working hunter 3'3".

MELISSA Spencer, riding No Dough, was the aggregate winner in the children's section. This pair took first place in children's English pleasure, pony conformation hunter under saddle and pony working hunter under saddle. Both children's working hunter under saddle and children's hunter hack were won by Suzanne Cole, riding Night Hawk. Riding Rasine Cherokee, Andrew Hayman won children's road hack and children's advanced cavaletti.

The leadline class was won by Toby Broermann, riding Royal Sonata. In green rider hunter, Richard Wilson and Chief were first. Kate Purdon and Monkey Business won equitation basic seat 12 and under. Equitation basic seat 13 and over was won by Leah Kitchen, riding Saturday's Taurus. First in the children's cavaletti class went to Jackie Wilson and Playboy.

Leaner fare at 'Recession Inn'

By TED KNUDTSON
Colonist-Monitor Service

CHICAGO, ILL. — A leaner menu selection is in store for people who dine out, according to many restaurateurs at the recent National Restaurant, Hotel and Motel Show here, who predicted that several old favorites still will be missing at what might be called, "New Recession Inn."

Rolls and butter and a few other side dishes you have become accustomed to as part of the standard fare still will be on the menu but now at an extra charge.

Conspicuously missing will be others of your old favorites like lobster and top-of-the-line steaks, on which the prices have soared out of reach or are constantly changing upward.

A leaner selection is in store for diners as local eateries try to discover ways of keeping sales from slipping a notch while customers tighten their belts. Already added to many menus are a greater variety of chicken dishes, cheese dishes and pasta variations.

This is not to say you will not be able to find a first-class meal in town. You will, but be prepared to pay an even loftier top dollar. Apparently many people are. The Madison Aenue expense account crowd is continuing to sink its teeth into $30 and $35 steaks with no visual discomfort at cheque time.

Raoul DeMoran of Chez Raoul in Detroit says that, layoffs or no layoffs, his customers still want the best he has to offer.

"Quality is the only thing going to make a restaurant survive," he professes. Maybe.

The middle-class and middle-priced restaurants are hurting and doing whatever they can to ease the pain of recession. Mary Harrington says she has had to drop steak items, add pasta and reduce the size of portions in general to keep prices down at Mister Fibley's in Flint, Mich., where the drop in auto sales has idled a fifth of the work force.

Ray and Joanne Dewey, owners of the Old Towne Restaurant in Cleveland, say they've had to add chicken and drop lobster as they see some customers less frequently because of the higher prices.

The roll-lovers among us received an editorial to the solar plexus when one restaurant magazine vowed, "No more free food."

However, the recession does have an appetizing side. Joan Bakos, editor of Restaurant Business, says you can expect to see more sauces, and the same basic foods will be prepared in ways you probably never knew of before. "Menus get much more imaginative in times like this," she said.

So does the ambiance. More restaurants are adding entertainment to keep their customers for the entire evening, according to Elaine Raffel, a restaurant show publicity director. The aim is to make those who must now choose between dinner or show choose dinner because a show will be included.

At the lower end of the scale, the fast-food outlets are ready to grab customers who have been fleeing the local coffee shop because the prices have become a bit too much.

McDonald's and Burger King already have added "adult" sandwiches to their dinner lineup in part to attract this crowd.

Roy Wilinson, a vice president of Artic Circle, a smaller chain of fast-food restaurants mostly in Utah, Idaho, Oregon and Wyoming, says he's trying to attract people with a chicken fillet sandwich and specials. The comeback of the three-for-a-dollar humburger has been popular with families, he says.

Isaac Hart, a restaurant consultant, says it's a matter of economies of scale. If a restaurant can sell more of one item the individual meals will cost less to prepare.

"They're trying to get you into buying more of fewer choices. The ideal restaurant would serve only one item," he says.

Whether a statement of caution tossed into the wind or a genuine fear of what may be, Armour, a supplier of many restaurants, is introducing new items with the slogan: "Here's soup in your eye."

Total product safety a consumer's 'dream'

By RONDA WARD
Colonist-FP Service

OTTAWA — Every day, Canadians buy and use dangerous products that they think are safe.

Consumers would like to believe that there are strict controls and rules of operation that laboratories testing dangerous compounds must follow.

There are no such rules.

They would like to believe that labs which cannot produce reliable results in safety-testing can lose certification to perform such work.

There is no such certification.

In fact, the notion that consumers are entitled to complete protection was described as "a dream" by Health Minister Monique Begin recently.

The minister's comment came after Simon de Jong, NDP member from Regina-West, asked the minister in the House of Commons recently if the government would establish a public toxicology lab to assure Canadians that the chemicals they contact daily are indeed safe.

"The honorable member's suggestion seems to me to be a dream," Begin replied.

There are 89 potentially deadly pesticides on the market in Canada. Products manufactured to kill bugs and weeds can sometimes kill people.

Canada requires all such compounds to be tested before a licence for sale can be issued.

The 89 pesticides have such a licence. That doesn't mean they are safe.

They are among a group of 97 products which were tested by an American firm called Industrial Biotest Laboratories (I.B.L.). On the basis of findings by that company, the pesticides went on the shelves of stores across the country.

While investigating discrepancies in a report on a drug called Napersan, also cleared by I.B.L., the Food and Drug Administration in the United States uncovered errors and what looked like misleading data. That was in 1977. Ever since then, authorities in the U.S. and Canada having been worrying over material submitted in support of the licences issued to permit sale of the products.

In the meantime, they are still being sold.

When a manufacturer of a pesticide (this includes the large family of insecticides and herbicides) wishes to market his product, it is up to him to prove the safety of the product. The recommendations for type of testing come from a number of departments, depending on the area of application.

If the substance is to be used in a forested area, Environment Canada may ask that tests be performed on one or more species of wildlife. A product for use in farming may be asked by Agriculture Canada to comply with that department's regional standards. And if it is a poison for use along highways or within cities, the Health Protection Branch of Health and Welfare can also add to the list of required study.

It sounds very thorough: but it may not work.

The pesticides in question were each subjected to an average of eight individual tests. The expense of the work is difficult to calculate. A five month study on small mammals (such as rats) may cost $100,000. The price of a large mammal study with three generations could run over half a million dollars.

The final decision on licencing is made by the department that set the testing standards. On the weight of I.B.L. studies, 97 pesticides hit the street.

The Department of Health and Welfare has released a list of the products. Eight have been confirmed safe but 89 are still under review as department staff sifts through mountains of material supporting the licences.

One name that appears on the review list is Vapona, a commercial name for a seemingly effective bug-killer that has been available for several years. The active ingredient in this and other 'no-pest strips' is dichlorvos. Vapona is an innocent-looking waxy bar, usually encased in an attractive paper frame, and is meant to be hung in the corner of home, office or cottage. It kills bugs, but according to the red print on the back of the package, it may also be harmful to small birds or tropical fish. Most schools and day care centres won't use it. The package instructions warn users not to expose Vapona to the chronically ill.

Tests urged for early puberty

Your Good Health
By PAUL G. DONOHUE, M.D.

Dear Dr. Donohue: We have a son who has just turned four. He is growing so fast! We had a blood test taken, which was normal. We are concerned because he has started to grow pubic hair and also has a bad complexion. His face is broken out all the time and I have to wash his hair daily. It is oily. Further tests have been suggested, but we don't want to put him through that unless it is necessary. Do you think it is? His genitals are also large for his age. — Mrs. G.K.

Puberty, the onset of sexual maturity, begins in boys anywhere from 10 to 13.5 years. The degree of sexual maturity is rated by many changes (so often seen as acne in teenagers).

Your little boy is much too young to have these changes. There may be nothing wrong, but he must be examined for conditions that can cause precocious puberty. Examples are adrenal or pituitary gland problems, which in turn may be related to production of sex hormones.

Even if no cause is found, the boy should be taken to a pediatrician or to a pediatric clinic affiliated with a hospital or medical school. There, more intricate testing can be carried out. I would consider this necessary. Four years old is just too young to be having the changes of puberty. Many correctible causes for precocious puberty can be and should be treated early.

Dear Dr. Donohue: I am 24. My problem is that I have a headache almost every day. I had a prescription from the doctor filled, but it ran out. They helped some. This has been like this for three months. Sometimes I get up in the morning with a headache and have one all day. Please give me some advice. — N.N.

I wish you could have been a bit more explicit about the kind of headache you get and the kind of medicine you took that helped.

Your headache doesn't seem to fit any of the classic causes. Chronic migraine of mild severity needs to be investigated. That's caused by a disorder in blood vessels leading to the brain. Tension headache is caused by spasm in the muscles of the scalp and neck.

If your headache comes on suddenly and is quite severe, or if there are seizures, visual disturbance, mental confusion, stiffness of the neck or temperature rise, then the doctor should be seen right away. Recurrent headache or headaches that stay in one place (as over the eye or ear) should also be brought to the doctor's attention. These signs can indicate potentially serious trouble, such as infection of the covering of the brain or a ruptured blood vessel of the brain or brain tumor.

A continuing mild headache, such as yours apparently is, can be caused by something as simple as a faulty furnace emitting carbon monoxide fumes. You might notice an improvement during the day when you are away from home.

Dear Dr. Donohue: What do you advise for the diabetic who wants to have a baby? — Mrs. R.O.

We speak of prenatal care as being essential for any pregnant woman. For the diabetic woman we can even speak of "pre-conception care." The early weeks of pregnancy are vital for the infant of the diabetic woman. Hence, it is well to have the diabetes under maximum control prior to conception to assure that those early weeks are as problem-free as possible, both for the mother and the developing infant. Counselling ideally should begin before attempts to become pregnant or as soon after pregnancy as possible. Diabetic pregnancies should be planned ones.

Dear Dr. Donohue: I had the same probelm as Mrs. J.A. with my 16-month-old wanting only milk and not wanting to get into solid foods. He didn't come around until I cut out liquids an hour before meals. Then he started eating. After meals I allowed all the milk he wanted. I thought you might want to pass this idea on to Mrs. J.A., who seemed to be having the same trouble with her baby. — D.D.

A tip worth passing on, for sure.

Artificial heart draws nearer

While all-white flexible sacs await next manufacturing step, technician Toby Fitzkee inspects completed sac that duplicated the left major ventricle of the natural heart at Penn State medical centre in Hershey, Pa. Polyurethane sacs permit blood flow, regulated by solid state senors, without clotting in left ventricular assist pumps and in total artificial hearts. With calves living an average of 70 days with total artificial heart, experts anticipate their use in humans within 10 years.

CAT scan replaces surgery in cancer probe

BALTIMORE (Reuter) — A computerized x-ray device might eliminate the need for 40,000 exploratory operations for lung cancer a year in the U.S., a two-year study released this week by Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions says.

Dr. Stanley Siegelman, the institution's director of diagnostic radiology, said the technique called computer-assisted tomography, popularly called a CAT scan, provides accurate analysis of a nodule in the lung by measuring its density.

Nodules are readily visible on conventional x-rays, but until now there was no method short of surgery to determine whether the growth was malignant or harmless scarring from an old infection.

Previously, phsyicians would perform a biopsy by inserting a needle through the chest into the suspect growth, with the danger of causing a lung to collapse. As an alternative, they could perform a thoracotomy—opening the chest and removing the affected section of lung—a procedure that requires 10 days in a hospital and costs up to $5,000.

By contrast, the new method costs less than $150 and may eliminate the need for more testing, he said.

Using the body scanner, radiologists examine an x-ray picture of a section of the body no thicker than five millimeters. A low dosage of radiation is beamed through the centre of the nodule, and the scanner measures absorption of the x-rays on a numerical computer printout.

Harmless nodules usually contain calcium, which has a higher atomic weight than tissue. Suspect growths which show higher numerical figures in the printout are harmless in more than 99 per cent of the cases, Siegelman said.

When low numerical figures result, surgical examination may be indicated and a high proportion of these cases have turned out to be cancer, he added.

The scanner has diagnosed malignant tumors as small as one centimetre—half as small as the tinest lung tumors that could be determined in the past, he said.

Oops! Sorry, dear, wrong pedal

Shoppers and workers at a supermarket in Cambridge, Ont., were startled when this Cadillac smashed through a window and demolished a checkout counter. The store was crowded but no one was hurt. The driver, June Campbell, 50, had been approaching the store with her husband, Don, and stepped on the accelerator instead of the brake when she tried to stop.

Family law switch pulled

MONTREAL (CP) — The federal government has backed down on its commitment to hand over responsibility for family law to the provinces.

In a position paper presented by Justice Minister Jean Chretien at the four-day meeting of federal and provincial ministers here, the federal government says it is prepared to give jurisdiction over divorce to provinces wishing to exercise the right.

At a federal-provincial conference on the constitution in February, 1979, Ottawa agreed to give up full jurisdiction over family law to the provinces.

Since then, Chretien noted, some of the provinces and women's groups have raised objections to the transfer.

Women's groups fear a division of jurisdiction in this field would worsen the already unsatisfactory enforcement of alimony and custody orders in Canada.

"They call for greater, not less, federal power over enforcement of these orders," Chretien told provincial representatives. They also fear divorce havens or "Canadian Renos" could be established, where couples can get quickie divorces.

Instead of giving family law to the provinces, Ottawa now proposes delegation of power in this area to provinces wanting it. The Federal Divorce Act would continue in force in provinces not seeking this authority.

Quebec and Newfoundland have expressed interest in controlling family law.

Blunt paid by Canada's gallery

OTTAWA (CP) — Anthony Blunt, the British art historian who spied for the Soviet Union, was paid an annual honorarium of at least $1,000 for eight years to act as an art adviser to Canada's National Gallery.

Blunt was involved in the purchase of four paintings by the gallery between 1948 and 1956.

Conservative MP Cossitt asked in the Commons Wednesday whether Thomas Harris, an art dealer who sold one of the paintings, was the man linked with the same spy ring as Blunt, Guy Burgess, Donald Maclean and Kim Philby.

The answer was affirmative.

Blunt, custodian of the queen's art treasure for 27 years, confessed his undercover work in 1964 but his involvement was not made public until publication of a book on the subject last year.

Wider vets' benefits hailed

OTTAWA (CP) — Legislation to increase benefits to thousands of Canadian war veterans, their widows and children was welcomed in the Commons Wednesday with almost unqualified praise by opposition party spokesmen.

The legislation, which will cost millions of dollars to implement over the next several years, was described by Conservative and New Democrat MPs as long overdue recognition of the rights of those who risked their lives and died for this country in war.

Veterans Affairs Minister Dan MacDonald said he was proud to be steering such progressive legislation through the Commons.

A major part of the legislation clears the way for pensions to be paid to an additional 26,000 widows and 10,000 children by 1987.

Pensions now are only paid to widows and dependent children of pensioners who received pensions for wounds that left them disabled by 48 per cent or more and to widows and children of veterans who died in action.

MacDonald said the new legislation will gradually lower the 48-per-cent restriction during the next 6½ years until dependents of all veterans who were receiving pensions for disabilities which impaired their activities by five per cent or more will receive a monthly pension.

As of Oct. 1, about 1,500 widows should start receiving monthly pensions ranging from $185 to $208 under the legislation.

The ceiling will gradually be raised until 1987 to benefit thousands more dependents, including the widows and children of former prisoners of war, at an annual cost of $43.2 million.

Veterans legislation introduced by the former Conservative government offered almost an identical provision, but was not approved before the government was defeated in the Commons and the Feb. 18 election was called.

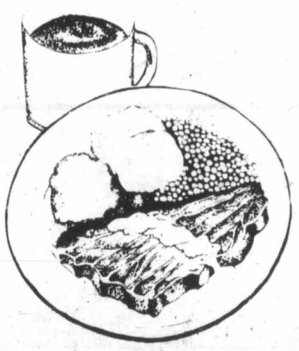

New Democrat Stanley Knowles, an ardent campaigner for better pensions, said that abandoning the 48-per-cent rule marks the end of an unfair regime.

"It's a day to celebrate," he said. But he pressed MacDonald to try to convince his cabinet colleagues to agree to implement the changes immediately instead of in steps over 6½ years.

Conservative Allan MacKinnon, veterans affairs minister in the Conservative government, also endorsed the change, saying: "It was so obviously unfair."

Liberties group taking heroin act battle to top

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Civil Liberties Association has decided to take its battle against the provincial Heroin Treatment Act to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The B.C. Appeal Court upheld the validity of the act last month, overturning a B.C. Supreme Court ruling.

The act imposes compulsory treatment on identified heroin addicts.

Association spokesman Reg Robson said: "This is a very important case and in the circumstances we feel we ought to go ahead, although it is going to cost us an awful lot of money."

Otter mishap rate 'alarming'

OTTAWA (CP) — A Conservative MP says figures released by the transport ministry show an alarming accident record for the Twin Otter aircraft and support his call for an independent investigation into the safety of the plane.

In an interview Wednesday, Tom Siddon stopped short of calling for grounding of the plane, built by crown-owned de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd., but said the accident record of Twin Otters was high compared with similar aircraft.

The figures show 67 Twin Otters crashed in Canada between 1970 and 1979, and 131 crashed world-wide. There were 279 deaths.

But Siddon, member for the B.C. riding of Richmond-South Delta, said the significant figures were the 54 accidents on landing or take-off, 39 of which were attributed to pilot error.

"I have no evidence that the so-called factor of pilot error is invalid, but when there have been that many crashes on final approaches, I find it alarming," said Siddon, also an aeronautical engineer.

"I think the government has a responsibility to put people's mind at rest, and have a thorough independent investigation."

Siddon, who testified before a federal royal commission on aircraft safety in May, said he believed stress-corrosion cracks in wing control rods found in two Twin Otters which crashed in B.C. might also be at fault in other accidents.

"I have to wonder if we're getting all the goods from the ministry of transport," he said.

He said there was a conflict of interest when the ministry of transport set aircraft regulations, investigated crashes and was associated with aircraft manufacturers which are crown corporations.

In the two B.C. accidents, a total of 13 persons were killed in Vancouver's Coal Harbor in January, 1978, and at Sechelt a year later.

Province to offer subsidy to firms for skills training

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. government will provide $14.4 million for a program to help major industries meet what Labor Minister Jack Heinrich say is a critical shortage of skilled tradesmen.

Heinrich said Wednesday the government is concerned a shortage of tradesmen will affect the development of the northeastern B.C. coalfields which it also plans to subsidize.

The program will offer industrial employers such as mining giants Cominco Ltd., Lornex Mining and Bethlehem Copper, a direct wage subsidy of $2.50 an hour for the first two years of an apprentice's training, to a set total.

The labor ministry will administer the program, aimed at encouraging employers to train 1,400 apprentices as machinists, electronic technicians, industrial mechanics, industrial electricians, millwrights, heavy-duty mechanics and diesel mechanics.

The program was designed by Assistant Deputy Labor Minister Bob Gray, who was hired from Cominco and designed the apprenticeship program for that company.

ARTS

Giving today's art a future

OTTAWA (CP) — An international congress of experts in the care of contemporary art is expected to set up machinery this week for a worldwide information network to help their work of preservation.

The congress being held at the National Gallery to mark the gallery's 100th anniversary has drawn conservation authorities from national and international galleries and private organizations to discuss the many new materials artists now are using to supplement traditional paint and canvas.

The meeting coincides with Pluralities 1980, a gallery showing of the works of 19 contemporary artists, ranging from concrete and steel sculptures to hand-colored photographic murals and works made of plastics or natural fibres.

Traditionalists may find the show disturbing because there are few, if any, old-fashioned paintings or sculptures of people or nature. But Hsio-Yen Shih, director of the National Gallery, says in the show's catalogue the works are, in their variety, "evidence of the nation's intellectual growth."

The use of new kinds of art materials, and others drawn from modern industrial society can cause difficulty for art conservation people because of the variety of ways in which the elements—light, atmospheric contaminants, heat and humidity—might affect them over a period of many years if they are to be preserved in art galleries or private collections.

WIN A summerfunthing

Play it daily and be eligible to win weekly prizes. It's easy and it's fun — just follow the instructions below . . .

THIS WEEK'S PRIZES

1st

3-MAN DOME TENT plus Gas camping lantern and stove, 2 fuel cartridges, 3 nylon day packs, and a complete cooking/eating set.

2nd

SONY PORTABLE AM/FM RADIO

3rd

SET OF 2 LOUNGE CHAIRS (3 sets to be won)

HOW TO PLAY

Locked inside the "SUMMERFUNTHING" safe are many valuable prizes. Some of those prizes could be yours if you find the correct PASSWORD that opens the combination lock. It's an exciting game that's fun and easy to enter. The instructions on the dial give you the position of the letters in the "SUMMERFUNTHING" PASSWORD. All you have to do is find the first letter to start. For instance, suppose you started at the letter E and the instructions read 2nd LETTER-FOUR COUNTER CLOCKWISE. Count four spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter E and you arrive at the letter A. The next instruction reads 3rd LETTER-EIGHT COUNTER CLOCKWISE, so count off eight spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter A and you arrive at the letter S. Finally the 4th letter. SIX CLOCKWISE means you count in a clockwise direction from the letter S and you arrive at the letter Y. In this example the PASSWORD is the word E-A-S-Y. To give you another clue and to add to the interest, each day's password is scrambled and you will find it at the bottom of the illustration.

GAME RULES

1. Winners will be chosen by random drawing from all valid entries. All winners must answer a skill testing question.
2. Winners from the previous week will be published in the Saturday Times and Sunday Colonist.
3. It is not necessary for contestants to buy the Colonist or Times to enter the SUMMERFUNTHING contest. An exact drawing of the entry form printed in the Colonist or Times may be made on a plain piece of paper. Note: copies produced by any other process will not be accepted.
4. The SUMMERFUNTHING judges will have the final decision on any interpretation of Game rules.
5. As a condition of receiving prizes, recipients agree to allow publication of their names and pictures in the Colonist or Times for no additional consideration. Submission of an entry indicates acceptance of all rules. No prize substitutions.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Daily Colonist and Victoria Times on Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands. Employees of Victoria Press and their immediate families are not eligible to enter.
7. In fairness to all, the Colonist or Times cannot answer questions or respond to phone calls or letters regarding THE SUMMERFUNTHING CONTEST.
8. All winners will be determined by a random draw from all valid entries.

HOW TO ENTER

Complete the puzzle and fill in the "PASSWORD" on the entry form. Clip out the entry form and send it to us in an envelope with the puzzle number printed in the top left hand corner of the envelope. (As illustrated.)

Be sure to include your name, address and phone number on the entry form.

Enter as many times as you wish but make sure each entry is in a separate envelope.

Mail your entries to:
"Summerfunthing"
Post Office Box 1390
Victoria, B.C.
V8W 3C4

or drop your entries off at.
Victoria Press
2621 Douglas St.
Monday through Friday
8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

A new puzzle will appear each day, but the weekly winners will be selected from all entries submitted for the previous week's puzzles.

To be eligible, your entry must be received by 5:30 p.m. on the Thursday following the week the puzzle was published.
Enter daily, or as often as you wish, but be sure each entry is submitted in a separate envelope.

Faltering Fred on firing line

NEW YORK (AP) — With the woman who helped bring Fred Silverman to NBC effectively removed as the company's chairman, a big question in television now is: Can Silverman, despite his plan to make the network No. 1 in prime time by the end of the year, keep his job much longer?

Silverman and NBC officials are not commenting publicly on his future as network president, but Jane Cahill Pfeiffer, relieved Tuesday of her duties as NBC chairman, told reporters Silverman had informed her that he was trying to get his contract renewed, but hadn't succeeded.

His three-year contract is due to expire in June, 1981.

Silverman, who is credited with engineering ABC's climb to the top in prime time, went to work at NBC in June, 1978, with the network entrenched in last place. CBS has since replaced ABC as No. 1, while NBC's standing hasn't significantly improved. The network's prime-time rating for the week of July 4th was the lowest recorded by any network in almost four years.

Although there have been some positive signs in the last few months, industry analysts are almost united in their belief that NBC's audience will continue to drop in the coming season.

The problems facing Silverman include:

● Dismal ratings for the David Letterman Show, which replaced three mid-morning game shows late last month.

● Failure to compete with the other networks' newsmagazine programs. The CBS program 60 Minutes continues to do well; ABC's 20-20 continues to improve its standing, while NBC's Prime Time Friday has often been near the bottom in the ratings.

● The network's Nightly News has dropped to third place in recent weeks.

● The long-dominant Today program now trails ABC's Good Morning America in the early time period.

Helen Chesnut's Garden Notes

A letter I received from a reader the other day posed a question one often hears debated over the back fence and that is whether suckers growing from the base of certain fruit trees can be transplanted to produce another tree just the same as the big one.

Well, the answer is that if the fruit tree is a grafted one, the sucker will likely come from the rootstock and will not produce fruit like the large tree. For example, pears are often grafted onto quince rootstock so if you took a sucker from the base of many pear trees, you would end up with a load of quinces.

As a result, discretion must be exercised when contemplating lifting a sucker to produce a new plant. Almost all roses are grafted onto wild rootstock, so a lifed sucker would certainly not produce the same flower as the original plant you purchased.

An exception to this rule, however, is the Rosa rugosa. Spireas also produce suckers that can be transplanted for new shrubs.

And then there's the good old raspberry, producing suckers like mad all season. The strongest of these new suckers are left to produce berries during next year's season; the rest are cut down at soil level, along with canes that have produced a crop this season.

Another question that pops up in my mailbag surprisingly often, and one which brings back some vivid memories, is how to deal with gophers and moles in the home garden. This particular plea for help calls to mind the autumn we moved into our former home in the Okanagan.

We had carefully dug many of our more treasured plants from our previous garden and planted them to winter over in a sheltered spot. In the spring, I noticed some odd-looking mounds of earth around the plants. Also, some of the plants had mysteriously vanished.

I didn't give the matter any more thought until later in the season after planting out some particularly gorgeous pepper plants. I noticed one day that a plant seemed to have half sunk into the ground. Then, a few days later, after the first plant had disappeared altogether, I was standing contemplating the remaining pepper plants when I actually saw one of them being yanked underground.

Well, I raced to the local friendly garden supply store to inquire what manner of beast could be inhabiting my garden which could perpetrate such goings-on. They told me I was harboring a pocket gopher and sold me a couple of traps which, laid at the end of a carefully excavated gopher run, neatly trapped two little animals and that was the last we saw of gophers for the remaining eight years we were to reside there.

Subsequently, we did have an appealing family of skunks which visited our yard periodically but we didn't find that they incurred any damage other than the occasional digging up of our kitchen wastes we had buried between plantings.

I must add that the fellows at the garden store told me of some very weird methods that can be employed to kill off gophers. One was to attach a hose from the exhaust of a running car into the gopher runs and another was to flood the runs in the spring to drown the young ones. However, the traps were effective for us and, while I don't relish having to kill animals who are only doing what comes naturally to them, it's the route I'd go again if my garden were threatened.

Some people are convinced that moles are the culprits when their plants begin to disappear in the manner I've described. In fact, moles are carnivorous and do not eat vegetables and bulbs. However, the mice that often make their homes in the mole runs do love these delicacies.

Again, trapping is the best control method for moles. The traps should be set only on presently used runways which can be determined by stamping down on the mounds and runways —the ones that are re-established will be your targets. Your dealer will recommend an effective trap.

Jack Smith

One of the most common conflicts in marriage is the one between the wife who is always late and the husband who is always punctual; or vice versa, not to be sexist about it.

It is so rare, in fact, to find two equally punctual spouses, that Judy Liebeck, who lives in Irvine, Calif., and evidently takes the train sometimes, is frankly skeptical about a recent Omega watch commercial that she describes as follows:

"A nice looking young man driving a spotless sports car through rain soaked streets glances at his very expensive Omega watch, intent on meeting a schedule. The ad then flashes to a sleek passenger train and zeroes in on a beautiful lady nervously checking her expensive Omega watch. The next thing you know, handsome man and beautiful lady rendezvous outside the doors of the Amtrak train station, each falling into the other's arms, right on time. Omega and symbol flash on the screen and the ad is over . . . "

What evidently bothers Mrs. Liebeck is the assumption that one could find a husband and wife, or man and woman friend, if that was the situation, who were both punctual, and an Amtrak train that was on time. She has fantasized what really happened as being something like this:

The man phones Amtrak and is told that the train will be two hours late. He stops off in a bar and has a drink or two and plays some pool, and, going by his Timex, which is close to correct, he reaches the station as the train pulls in. Meanwhile, the lady on the train is frantic because the conductor has not told her the train is late. In fact she cannot find a conductor. She has left her watch at home. Finally the train arrives. She is relieved to find that her suitcase has arrived too, because she has been given no ticket for it. She lugs it to the front door and sees her man walking toward her. The conclusion, in Mrs. Liebeck's words: "He crosses his eyes a little to bring her into proper focus, and they fall into each other's arms . . . "

I agree with Mrs. Liebeck that hers is a far more plausable story than the one in the commercial. I don't know from my own experience that Amtrak trains are more often late than not, nor do I wish to imply, and I doubt that Mrs. Liebeck does, any fault in Omega watches. The fault is in ourselves, not in our machines.

My wife has at least five watches, including those she has lost track of, which probably lie at the bottom of some tiny drawer, entangled in a snake pit of junk jewelry like the contents of a pirate treasure chest. Some of them are hardly more than toys, no bigger than dimes and made to last no more than a season. But two are very good Bulova watches. One is a Mickey Mouse watch, and I don't mean mickey-mouse, and the other is the watch I received for 25 years of tireless effort in the employ of the Los Angeles Times. Those two are on loan from me. At any given time, though, the odds are that she will not be wearing either of them, and doesn't know quite where they are.

On the other hand, if I leave home without my watch I feel naked, and am vaguely ill at ease all day. I am almost never late. In fact, I am almost always early, because being early is the only way not to be late.

I suppose that when one spouse is obsessive about time, the other should treat it more casually, for balance. I am not altogether enchanted by the thought of a husband and wife rushing toward some rendezvous-like automatons, each with eyes on the second hand. I'd rather wait five minutes. But no more than that.

As I say, I don't wish to seem sexist. In my own experience, though, I have found men to be more insistent on punctuality than women. Possibly that is because boys raised in the Horatio Alger Jr. tradition have punctuality drilled into them as a prerequisite of success. Also, the regimentation of the military service tends to turn boys into alarm clocks, because being there on time is often more important than what one does after one gets there.

Of course, with women's increasing presence in the war room and the board room, punctuality may become as common among them as among men, and no less irritating to those who are not afflicted with it. I doubt it, though. I suspect that women are generally attuned to some inner clock, like bees; some pyscho-physiological timepiece that has its own exigencies, answers only to its own schedule, and is immune to the plans and importunities of spouses and other outsiders. Women are not as easily hurried as men, and not as easily slowed down, and that is why they may have half a dozen watches they rarely wear; because they are at one with time; it is of them, not outside them, and it cannot be manipulated or altered to suit the calculations of some presumptuous little piece of jewelry on the wrist.

Because I have not lived with a large number of women, I bring little variety of experience to that hypotheses. However, I have had a great deal of experience with one woman, for whatever that's worth.

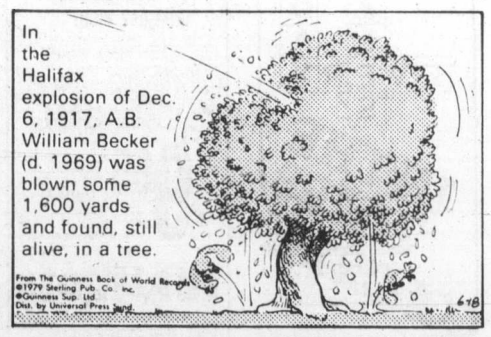

A good many years ago, when she was in the PTA, she was going to the state convention in San Francisco and I drove her to the station to catch the train. It was then Southern Pacific, not Amtrak. On the platform, as the train was loading and making noises like a train that was about to depart, she kept giving me last-minute bulletins on how to take care of the house and children.

"You'll miss your train," I said at last.

"Don't worry," she said. "The train will wait."

The train waited. I know because I checked it by my watch.

Four-death crash Sept. 18

Three crucial questions posed at inquest

By DONNA REIMER
Colonist correspondent

NANAIMO — Why did pilot Ray Crandall fly into a fog bank shortly before his Pacific Coastal Airlines flight crashed last Sept. 18 on a hillside near Port Hardy?

Was the pilot flying without having passed his annual proficiency check?

Why did Pacific Coastal chief pilot, who was later fired, file a report with the transport ministry charging "discrepancies" in the airline's operation?

All of those questions were raised during the second day of the inquest into the Sept. 18 crash which killed four of the nine people aboard the plane, including pilot Crandall.

One of the questions may never be answered.

Former Pacific Coastal owner Don MacGillivray may shed some light on the other questions when he takes the witness stand today.

There could only be speculation as to why Crandall flew the twin-engine Islander into the fog bank.

When asked to speculate, Chris Chandler, another Pacific Coastal pilot and a friend and Gabriola Island neighbor of Crandall's, said that perhaps the pilot thought he had a way back out of the fog.

"I can only say that a pilot usually leaves a back door," Chandler said.

"Maybe that back door closed."

Chandler said that it would have been reasonable for a pilot receiving the weather information available at Comox that September morning to "have a look-see" at the weather by flying toward the reported fog.

Testimony from Alan McNutt, who started work as chief pilot of Pacific Coastal on Sept. 14, raised the questions about whether Crandall was flying legally and what had prompted a Sept. 12 and 13 base inspection of Pacific Coastal's facilities at Cassidy by the transport ministry.

McNutt testified that Pacific Coastal's own records seemed to indicate that Crandall's last annual pilot proficiency check was on Aug. 31, 1978, meaning the pilot would have been flying illegally in September of 1979.

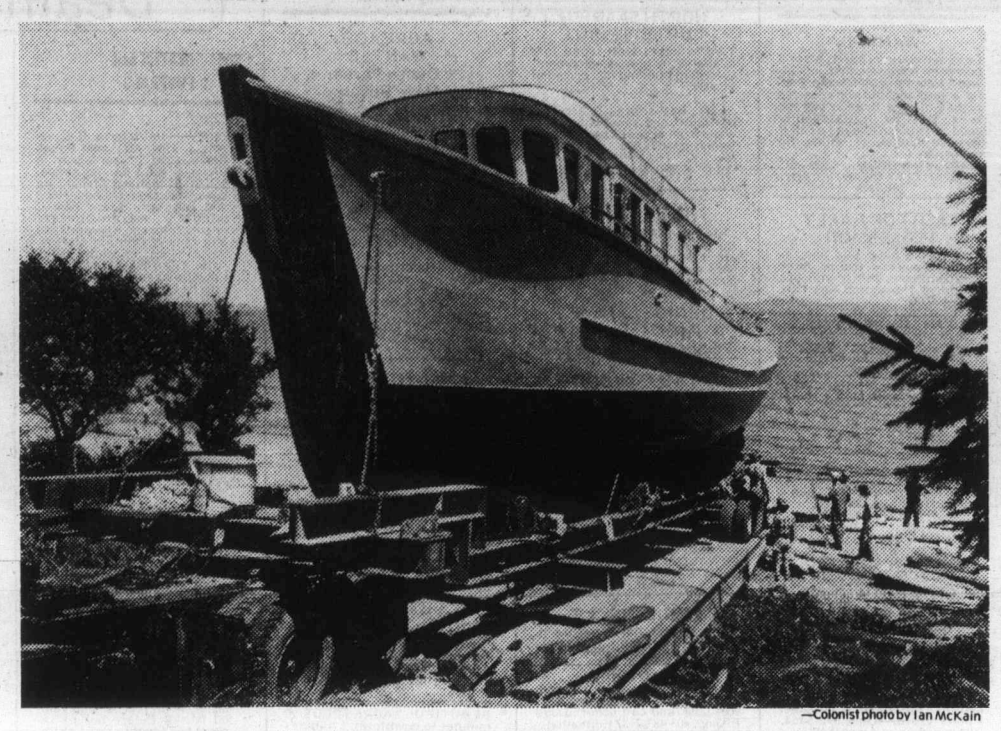

McNutt also said while answering questions from crown counsel Neil Robertson that the base investigation of Pacific Coastal was made in reponse to a report filed by the previous chief pilot.

That report outlined what the former chief pilot believed were "discrepancies" in the airline's operation.

McNutt said he had no knowledge of why his predecessor was later relieved of his duties.

Testimony in the inquest is expected to be completed today or Friday.

Coroner W. J. Carpenter of the transportation section of the provincial coroner's office in Vancouver, is conducting the inquest.

New home away from home hits water today

At high tide today this home-made pleasure craft will slip into the waters of Cordova Bay under the watchful eyes of its builder W.M. Trenholme, of 5164 Cordova Bay Road. By that time the 60-foot vessel will have a name, the only thing missing. Otherwise all is set for the first cruise, including eight berths and all the comforts one could wish in a home away from home. Trenholme is an accountant and boat building is his hobby. This is the second large craft he has built, a project which took six years.

Barbara clears air, benches

Barbara Wallace (NDP—Cowichan-Malahat) is a lady, no doubt about that.

But even the gentlest of ladies sometimes get pushed beyond normal limits of politeness.

And it happened to Wallace in the Legislature on Wednesday afternoon.

Al Passarell (NDP—Atlin) was speaking in the house under a barrage of heckling led by Jack Kempf (SC—Omineca). Passarell objected to some of Kempf's phrases and asked the chairman to order him to withdraw one phrase.

But chairman Bruce Strachan (SC—Prince George) said he couldn't do that because he hadn't heard the phrase complained about.

Passarell refused to repeat it because it was too vulgar and there were ladies present.

Strachan pressed him for guidance, unable to call for a withdrawal unless he knew what the phrase was. Passarell refused to repeat what he had heard Kempf say.

And it was at that point that Barbara Wallace decided to do her bit for truth and justice.

Face flushed, she stood up and told Strachan "I'll tell you what he (Kempf) said. He said f--- off."

And with that she sat down as male MLAs struggled for the entrances to the corridors and Kempf charged from the house in anger.

Outside Wallace was not contrite. "I won't repeat what I said in there," she said. "But is was obvious that Al didn't want to repeat what we had all heard in the presence of ladies so I thought I would come to his aid."

MLAs and the press were waiting to see how staid Hansard handles the clearly enunciated unparliamentary language.

Construction talks off, shutdown draws nearer

A province-wide construction shutdown seemed nearer Wednesday after negotiators failed in what was thought to be a final bid to resolve two outstanding issues.

"We didn't do too well," said Chuck McVeigh, president of the Construction Labor Relations Association. "We're still hung up on the contentious issue of an affiliation clause."

Union spokesmen couldn't be reached for comment.

CLRA, representing some 800 contractors, is opposed to a clause that would allow the 17 unions in the B.C. and Yukon Building Trades Council to refuse to work alongside unions not affiliated with the council.

McVeigh said the day-long meeting dealt almost exclusively with this issue, leaving little time for discussion of the other unsolved problem of wages.

He said no further meetings were set and that he didn't expect any development before Friday, when the results of strike and lockout votes are to be made known.

There appeared little reason to believe both proposed moves wouldn't get solid backing.

The council's 17 unions have been conducting strike votes among the 45,000 construction workers involved. The contractors have carried out a lockout vote at the same time.

McVeigh has said the industry is willing to face a shutdown rather than accept the affiliation clause, something he says would put the contractor in the place of a helpless third-party.

Late last week McVeigh had voiced optimism that the last two issues would be resolved prior to Friday's day of decision. He had little reason for such optimism Wednesday night.

Where money is concerned, the unions have rejected CLRA's offer of a $3.15-an-hour increase in wages and benefits over two years on an average wage of $15.07.

The contractors say it was the best offer made in the construction industry this year in Canada. The unions argue that it comes to less than 10 per cent for top categories. They note labor wage increases in the first quarter of this year averaged 11.9 per cent.

McVeigh said there were some adjustments to final proposals Wednesday. The unions, he said, had recommended that affiliation disputes go to the Canadian Labor Congress for resolution, but that CLRA found this "unacceptable" because there seemed little reason to believe such an understanding "wouldn't be abused."

Saanich to listen on valley

Land locked into an agricultural preserve created by Saanich about two years ago will be examined by council at a public meeting July 29, Mayor Mel Couvelier said Wednesday.

Council will hear briefs from residents of the Blenkinsop Valley who want the Blenkinsop Valley Resolution Area borders changed.

The resolution covers the 1,000-acre valley and states it is to be preserved for agricultural and rural use.

Many property owners have complained to council that the resolution prevents them from selling property they had bought for a retirement income.

Couvelier said he finds it hard to defend the resolution area boundaries because some of the land clearly should not be included.

Council will hold a public meeting in the fall to discuss points raised at the public session, Couvelier said.

UNION SUING CABINET TRIO

VANCOUVER (CP) — Three B.C. cabinet ministers were named as defendants Tuesday in a B.C. Supreme Court suit by the B.C. Government Employees Union.

The union is challenging the right of the ministers to bypass the public service commission and hire their own temporary summer help.

Listed as defendants along with the public service commission and government officials were Energy Minister Robert McClelland, Transportation and Highways Minister Alex Fraser and Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe.

The union in documents filed at Vancouver said the Public Service Commission in a circular March 7 purported to delegate to deputy ministers, personnel officers and their equivalents the authority to appoint seasonal staff from May 1 to Sept. 30, 1980.

The union seeks a supreme court declaration that the ministers do not have the power to appoint auxiliary employees and a declaration that the Public Service Commission does not have the authority to delegate, except by its own regulations.

Police 'muff' soliciting law

VANCOUVER (CP)— The lawyer whose defence of a prostitute resulted in the 1978 Supreme Court of Canada ruling blamed for allowing open prostitution to flourish says police here fail to use anti-soliciting laws properly to control the problem.

"The vice squad is just sitting on their thumbs," said Tony Serka, whose plea before the Supreme Court resulted in the February, 1978, ruling that a woman could not be charged with soliciting unless she was pressing and persistent.

"Some of those girls are pressing and persistent," Serka said in an interview Tuesday.

He said he has acted as a lawyer in at least five cases since the Supreme Court ruling where charges of soliciting were dropped before the trial date came up.

"I don't think police are giving the evidence necessary for a conviction," he said. "What do (prostitutes) have to do, jump on somebody's back?

"There are certain situations where the facts would warrant a conviction on soliciting. But the police are either grossly misinformed about soliciting laws or are not enforcing the laws in order to give themselves a new type of authority."

Serka said police demands for tougher prostitution laws might be a ploy to regain control over the street scene.

In the past, police in other cities have been accused of using prostitutes for information contacts and free sex, he said, emphasizing he has not heard of such activitity here.

However, Serka warned if new laws gave police the power to charge a hooker "for what she is, not what she does," the possibility for police to use the prostitute would exist.

But police chief Don Winterton said police are guided by advice provided by the attorney-general and are doing everything within their power to control prostitution.

"It's not just a problem in Vancouver but across Canada," Winterton said. "The prostitution laws at present are simply not workable."

Motorcyclist breaks leg in rear-end crash

A young motorcyclist was injured Wednesday afternoon when he rear-ended a pickup truck in the 3900-block Metchosin Road.

Danny Peter Reynen, 18, of Rocky Point Road, was listed in satisfactory condition in Victoria General Hospital with a broken right leg and foot, and was undergoing surgery late Wednesday night

Colwood RCMP said the truck, driven by 18-year-old Charles Turner of William Head Road, was stopped in a stretch where B.C. Telephone Co. workmen were working, and Turner was waiting for an oncoming vehicle to pass before proceeding.

Reynen's Yamaha motorbike hit the rear of Turner's truck. The mishap occurred about 1 p.m., police said.

Big reward in blaze

DUNCAN — Arson has been blamed for the razing of Island Shake and Shingle Ltd.'s Lake Cowichan sawmill May 16.

Insurance companies have posted a $25,000 reward for information leading to the conviction of the arsonist responsible for the fire.

Coast Claims Ltd. of Victoria, insurance adjusters in the million-dollar fire, announced the reward following a joint meeting attended by members of the fire commissioner's office, RCMP and the insurance companies, who agreed that the fire was definitely caused by arson.

Coast Claims president Jim Eisler told the Colonist that although the reward was high, so were the stakes.

"It was a fairly large fire, with something in the area of $1 million in insurance claims involved.

"The reward is being offered because arson is on the upswing and becoming something of a problem," Eisler added.

"Insurance companies are becoming concerned because of the high cost to the public of arson."

Eisler said he did not know whether the two insurance companies involved (one Canadian and one American), which stand to lose somewhere in the region of $1 million between them, had decided to pay the amount yet.

"There is a very intensive investigation going on and I imagine they are awaiting the results of that investigation.

"It's not unusual for companies to delay payment during such an investigation."

Meanwhile, Ed Taylor of the Nanaimo fire marshal's office has paid tribute to the team of investigators of Duncan RCMP Constable Ken Handy, Lake Cowichan RCMP Constable Ken Yaeger and special investigator Steve Bunyk of the insurance bureau of crime prevention, who worked on the investigation.

"We worked well together as a team on this fire. We will be using this type of team concept more and more in investigating fires on Vancouver Island," Taylor said.

Taylor added "the investigation of this fire is almost at a dead end. The offering of the reward may prompt some more leads in the case."

"We know that a crime has been committed but we still do not know who did it.

"It's not difficult to find a motive for the arson but pinning it down on any one individual is another matter."

Nanaimo region crown counsel

Bledsoe resigns

Canadian Press

NANAIMO — Nanaimo regional crown counsel Richard Bledsoe has resigned, effective July 1, after being suspended for professional misconduct by the B.C. Law Society, a spokesman for the provincial attorney-general's ministry has announced.

Dennis Murray, a counsel staff lawyer, has temporarily taken over as regional crown counsel.

A law society statement said its disciplinary committee suspended Bledsoe for three months starting July 1 and ordered him to pay the $250 hearing costs plus disbursements.

The suspension stems from an incident which occurred when Bledsoe was in private practice in this city, prior to taking the position of crown counsel Oct. 1, 1976.

The law society's committee said Bledsoe was knowingly giving a client false explanations and assurances about a legal matter, falsely advising the client he had issued a lawsuit and falsely making statements to the client about another lawyer's supposed misconduct, which he knew to be untrue.

Searchers hunt missing hiker

Police and firefighters, aided by a tracking dog, were searching late Wednesday night for a hiker reported missing in East Sooke Park.

An RCMP spokesman on duty at the Colwood detachment was unable to say whether the hiker was a man, woman or child. A spokesman for the Langford volunteer fire department said he had strict orders not to divulge any information.

Police said the search started just after dusk. The missing person was believed to have been following the park's circular hiking trail.

RCMP officers from the Sooke detachment and nine firefighters were involved in the search, along with the police dog.

Collector's Coins

We pay high prices for all Canadian & U.S. Proof-like mint sets. We also buy all Foreign Coins of numismatic value. Of particular interest to us are crowns or silver dollar size coins. High prices are paid for all government issue modern sets (eg. Bahamas, Iran, Great Britain, etc).

Antique Jewellery & Silver

We pay high prices for Antique Jewellery (Victorian, Georgian, Edwardian) which merits in our opinion a value for resale greater than gold or silver content. Brooches, lavaliers, lockets, diamond pieces and rings are of particular interest to us. Many people believe that old mine cut or rose cut diamonds are not valuable. While they have less value than modern cuts, you may still have a saleable asset.

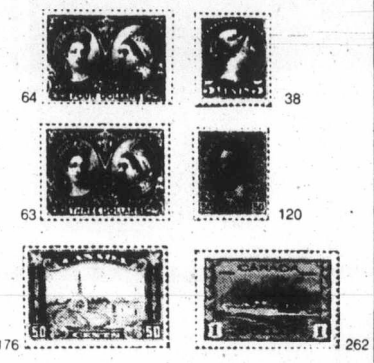

Antique Silver is in demand. We pay high prices for Georgian, Victorian. Early Canadian and American Silver (tea services, serving dishes, goblets, etc.) We are high bidders for antique silver.

Silver Plate: We also buy items of silver plate (no cutlery). Only undamaged pieces please. Tea services, trays, serving dishes, and any other plated articles.

Stamps

The following prices are paid for Mint, Fine Centre, Lightly Hinged Stamps. The following partial listing of Canadian stamps is only a small example of what we buy and the prices we pay. We buy Canadian collector's stamps, mint or used, singles or blocks of four, sheets or an extensive collection (if, in our opinion, they are of merit) at a COMPARABLE MARKET PRICE FOR IMMEDIATE CASH. Police sport jeans, fuzz, hold back report details

By DON COLLINS
Colonist staff

That man who looks like Wild Bill Hickok with a five-o'clock shadow is your friendly neighborhood policeman.

He has long shuddered at the nickname "fuzz," but it's there on his cheeks in second-day growth today, serving the purpose of a somewhat odd strike weapon, along with the jeans and other civilian clothes that give him that gun-on-hip wild west look.

It's all part of the picture of a police strike that began legally but in limited fashion Wednesday in Victoria, Esquimalt and Oak Bay.

Both the police unions and administration said the public was being served in normal fashion.

The odd appearance wasn't interfering with duty, but the big weapon was some internal strategy that had no effect on the public, but which threatened to deal an economic blow to the municipalities.

While police union spokesmen didn't want to say what it was, the administration said it was a matter of not filling in details in reports—something that would necessitate overtime work and pay when the dispute is over.

"It will have to be done on someone's time—on overtime, and the longer this goes on the more overtime there will be," explained Victoria's deputy police chief, Jim Smith.

He said sub-headings, such as names and locations, were being put into such reports as those dealing with accidents, and that the rest of the essential information was recorded in the individual officer's notebook for use in the future.

Like others, Smith said there were no problems Wednesday.

"The men are doing the job," he said.

Some municipal officials feared that the switch from uniforms to civvies would make it difficult for citizens to identify police officers, but the very obvious holster and gun seemed to answer that concern.

"Then again, the cop could be mistaken for some visiting Albertan," cracked one sidewalk observer.

At any rate, police union spokesman Sgt. Bryan Bailey of the Victoria Police Association said officers have other means of identifying themselves when the occasion arises.

Bailey said he wanted to assure the public it would get full protection.

"We realize we have a duty to the public and we intend to carry that duty out," he said.

Added B.C. Federation of Labor secretary Dave MacIntyre, who has been acting as chief negotiator for the police: "Our dispute is with the employer, not the public."

Police were in a legal strike position Tuesday when they were informed that mediator Bob Almgren had reported out of the dispute.

Involved are some 190 police officers below the rank of inspector. Their contracts in the three

Abortion program on line

A pilot program announced barely a month ago to reduce the number of abortions in B.C. may get the axe as a result of provincial budget cuts.

A provincial health ministry spokesman said an estimated $290 million shortfall in provincial revenues means a number of programs may be cut back or eliminated, including the pilot program announced May 28 for the Interior.

The spokesman said the health ministry proposal involves six different centres. The proposal involves hiring additional staff, and the cost would depend on how many centres were actually approved.

Float plane lands safely in farm field

Five passengers and a pilot escaped injury when an Airwest Beaver float plane made an emergency landing about 6.15 p.m. Wednesday in a farmer's field near Maple Bay.

Duncan RCMP, who investigated, said the aircraft was on a scheduled flight from Duncan to Vancouver.

It landed upright in a field off the 1300 block of Herd Road.

Second lowest bid wins outfall project

A $3,415,000 contract to replace the trouble-plagued Clover Point sewage outfall was awarded Wednesday to the San Francisco-based company of Peter Kiewit Sons Co. Ltd.

But that may not be the final price tag.

The Capital Region Board adopted a recommendation from its solid waste management and sewage disposal committee that Kiewit's bid—the second-lowest—be accepted although the company requested a clause allowing it to claim for cost overruns if unforeseen problems crop up on the job.

Kiewit will install 3,500 feet of coated steel pipe—already acquired by the board at a cost of $214,000—from the Clover Point pumping station out to sea. The job is to be completed by November.

The low bidder, K. Viney Contracting Ltd. of Vancouver, was ruled ineligible by the committee's engineering consultants owing to inexperience and failure to meet bid bond specifications.

Directors refused to consider a letter from Viney which committee chairman Ald. Robert Wright said "substantially altered" the terms of its original $2,979,000 bid.

Wright did not elaborate on the Viney matter, but said he stood by the original recommendation for Kiewit, after having considered the letter.

The engineering consultants, CH2M Hill Canada Ltd., did not review in detail the three other bids, which ranged in price from $4.8 million to $7.3 million, reporting that apart from the cost-overrun clause, Kiewit's bid met the tender specifications in all respects.

The bid was accepted

NATO enjoys edge on Reds, surprising report claims

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — A liberal defence group says NATO is more powerful than the Warsaw Pact military forces, having outspent them for years.

The statement Wednesday by the Washington-based Centre for Defence Information contrasts with the Carter administration's view that the communist bloc is leaping ahead of the West in defence spending. That belief has led the U.S. government to plan for military expenditures of $1 trillion over the next five years.

"In this (U.S.) presidential election year it has become fashionable to denigrate the power of our armed forces," said retired Rear-Admiral Gene La Rocque, director of the centre. "But our study shows that the United States military is not weak or starved for funds."

The report said NATO had more nuclear weapons than the Soviet Union and was superior in virtually all elements of national power. And NATO "will retain the advantage in the future as plans to produce more than 20,000 nuclear weapons over the next decade are implemented."

The report noted that U.S. Defence Secretary Harold Brown said in February that by most relevant measures, the U.S. remained the military equal or superior to the Soviet Union.

It added: "Even utilizing the CIA's questionable methodology for comparing military budgets (which assumes that the Soviets pay as much as the U.S. does for soldiers and weapons), combined NATO military spending has exceeded that of the Warsaw Pact for many years."

The report said that in 1979, NATO spent at least $215 billion, compared to $175 billion for the Warsaw pact.

SCALPEL TRADED

BALTIMORE (AP) — Johns Hopkins Hospital doctors say they have found a way to determine whether a lung tumor is harmless.

The procedure could eliminate the need for thousands of operations on a nationwide basis.

By using a computer-controlled radiological scanner, the doctors found that the density of a tumor can be used as a way of accurately and quickly determining whether a growth is dangerous.

Man's chest pains fault of an unknown brother

MOSCOW (AP) — Doctors found the unborn embryo of a 40-year-old man's twin in the man's chest after he complained of pains and breathing difficulty, a Soviet newspaper says.

Surgeons at the Azerbaijan State Institute for Medical Training thought at first that the man had a benign tumor, said the Baku Worker, a newspaper in the Azerbaijan capital.

But they found "a thick-walled, many-chambered cyst of a very large size that turned out to be an undeveloped human embryo," chief physician Panakh Alievich Aliev is quoted as saying.

"In the course of further examinations the surgeons found hair and bone."

The embryo had "a head with hair covering the back of it," Aliev said. "On the face there were undeveloped, swollen eye sockets. There was a palate and even an ossified tooth in the upper jaw.

"The body was covered with a soft, fatty membrane-like paste."

The embryo had caused one of the man's lungs to be only a third of the usual size, with only one lobe instead of three.

The man was identified only as "N" and was said to be a driver in Baku.

Saudis fume, U.S. cools F-15 snub

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The U.S. state department Wednesday sought to play down a public dispute with Saudi Arabia by not commenting on sharp Saudi reaction to a congressional move to block its purchase of new weaponry.

Saudi ambassador Sheikh Faisal al Hejelan said Tuesday the United States was putting Israel ahead of its real interests in the Middle East and hinted his country might turn elsewhere for weapons if denied the equipment.

In Riyadh on Wednesday, Saudi Defence Minister Prince Sultan ibn Abdulaziz said Saudi Arabia would not take no for an answer.

"Our reply to this is that the kingdom will never ask for a weapon and be refused," he told Saudi military graduates.

The Saudi officials were reacting to a letter from 68 senators urging President Carter to refuse the sale of extra fuel tanks and multiple ejection bomb racks for U.S.-built F-15 jet fighter aircraft.

"We read a lot of speeches. We see a lot of statements. We respond to some but not to others," state department spokesman John Trattner said when asked about the Saudi statements.

The statements by Saudi officials used exceptionally sharp language in view of the close trade and security ties between their country and the United States.

U.S. officials said the Saudis have conveyed the same views privately before announcing them in public.

"It is long past time that the Israeli problem is placed in perspective and other vital interests of the United States, its key friends, the international community, world peace and certainly the overwhelming majority of people in the Middle East . . .," Faisal said in his statement.

"Much more than just the equipment which the statement today opposes selling to the kingdom is available through other sources—and without restrictions or conditions," he added.

Prince Sultan's speech, reported by the Saudi press agency, blamed supporters of Israel for the Senate letter.

"We say to the Zionist lobby, which is putting pressure on during the period of the U.S. elections, that you are defeated wherever you are," he said.

Boil it, lake-water drinkers told

Saltspring Islanders who get their water from St. Mary Lake are being advised to boil their water or get it from another source until health officials can determine what is causing unusual odors and tastes in lake water.

Regional health officer Dr. Allan Arneil said Wednesday that the cause of the odors and tastes has not been determined, and tests are being done on lake water at the moment. Until the results of those tests are available some time next week, Arneil said residents should take precautions in using lake water.

Arneil said that about 1,500 Saltspring Island residents take their water from the lake, either directly or from a water system which uses the lake as a source.

No complaints about unusual odors or tastes have been received from people drawing their water from the island's other main water source, Maxwell Lake, Arneil said.

Secrecy veils two-cabinet meeting

By JIM HUME
Colonist staff

Premier Bennett has ordered a veil of secrecy drawn across Friday's Alberta-B.C. cabinet meeting.

His press agent, Hall Leiren, delivered a memorandum on Wednesday to political reporters assigned to cover what the premier has termed "the historic meeting," spelling out the ground rules but giving no basic reasons for extraordinarily tight security.

The rules state that all reporters, even those assigned to the legislative press gallery and already having security clearance, will require special credentials for the conference.

Reporters have also been informed that once Bennett and Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed enter Government House to start their one-day session, all reporters will be asked to leave the grounds of Government House.

It also proclaims "there will be no statements issued, or interviews, between the time the meeting starts and the 3:30 p.m. windup."

In effect, the press restrictions mean that reporters will be confined to questions on the run as Lougheed and Bennett leave the legislative buildings shortly before 10 a.m. and further questions on the fly as the two leave their car and go behind the doors of Government House.

The press gallery executive immediately protested the arrangements and objected to the ruling that once the meeting starts reporters will be asked to leave and await a 4:30 p.m. press conference back at the Legislature.

Gallery president Jake Banky, in his official protest to Leiren, said all members of the gallery "take strong exception to the press arrangements made by your office . . . We question the need for special passes for gallery members who already carry government-issued passes which adequately identify them.

"More important, we wonder at the reasoning behind the decision to banish the press from the grounds of Government House once the meeting gets under way.

"Are you suggesting that, otherwise, we would be peeking through the windows?

"Surely it would have been more appropriate to observe the normal courtesies granted to the press on occasions of this sort."

There had been no response late Wednesday from Leiren or the premier.

Bennett indicated earlier this week that the tight security was being ordered to enable the Alberta delegates to the meeting "to feel secure," but members of the Alberta press corps contacted Wednesday expressed the same dismay and concern as that expressed by their counterparts in B.C.

They say it isn't Lougheed's style to avoid the media or hide behind security blankets.

Leiren and Bennett were also playing coy on the times of arrival and the

The only way to fly — for MPs

No matter what criticism is levelled against Canada's MPs, no one can ever accuse them of under-valuing their services, false modesty or lack of self-esteem. On the contrary, our elected representatives in Ottawa seem to be charmingly candid in acknowledging — in every way possible way — that they are special people deserving of the best.

All things considered, they have managed fairly well over the years to elevate themselves to a station in life which matches this perception. With the possible exception of air travel. Until now, you see, the poor wretches have had to make do with the plebeian surroundings, cramped knee-room, bawling infants and other indignities of economy class. Just like any other Canadian peasant.

Fortunately, however, this injustice has been corrected. George St. Jacques, director of personnel and administration for the House of Commons, confirmed this week that MPs may now travel first-class when using their 52 free flights a year. And, of course, the same first-class privileges apply to the six free flights a year to Ottawa which were formerly restricted to politicians' spouses but are now — since the successful battle of Vancouver Centre MP Pat Carney — available to "designated next of kin."

The cost is estimated at $360,000 a year, on top of the present $2 million bill for MPs' air travel. A mere bagatelle, when one considers that federal spending this year will total about $60 billion-plus, and the deficit a modest $14 billion.

Only the skinflints among us will question why an MP should not travel economy, and only the most churlish will ask why, indeed, he needs 52 free flights a year to visit his constituents. Outdoing all such scrooges for sheer misery of outlook is the person who calculates that 52 first-class trips a year from Ottawa to Vancouver — at $400 a shot — comes to $20,800, and that this sum in addition to MPs' present indexed salary of $44,100 makes them very high-priced help.

After all, if our Ottawa representatives can enjoy such perks as free tailor and barbershops, suites of three or four offices each, two linen-and-fine-china restaurants, four cafeterias, their own private bus service and four free bulk mailings a year, isn't it only fair and reasonable that they should fly first-class?

The aforementioned Mr. St. Jacques had the best explanation for this move. "Some members," he said, "particularly those who travel long distances, felt they should be permitted to fly first-class because of the superior accommodations."

Well, naturally.

Heroic delusions

Why is that so many great athletes and entertainers never know when to quit? Long after they should have retired gracefully from the spotlight they continue trying to hog it, often producing nothing more than a grotesque parody of their former skills and talents.

When the late Gracie Fields in her declining years tried to hit the top notes she had scaled with such ease in her youth, it was agonizing for her and embarrassing for her fans. Frank Sinatra's famed vocal chords today seem more than a mite rough around the edges. Now, heaven help us, Muhammad Ali — a flabby and out of shape 38 — is trying to stage a September comeback to fight Larry Holmes for one version of the world heavyweight championship.

The superb boxer who used to, in his much-quoted boast, "float like a butterfly and sting like a bee," will probably persist in his youth-chasing delusions until he goes down and out like a stricken whale.

It's sad. If only they'd let us remember them as they used to be . . .

COMMENT/BACKGROUND

Schmidt: a credible man for peace mission

Joseph Harsch
Christian Science Monitor News Service

WASHINGTON — The West German chancellor went to Moscow a few days ago with the most earnest and serious task of these times to perform.

That task was nothing less than to attempt to stem the decline in East-West relations before the nations have passed the point of no return and find themselves sliding into a real disaster.

Events have cast one man, Helmut Schmidt, for that role. As German chancellor he presides over the most prosperous and productive economy in Western Europe, and also over the largest European army in NATO's order of battle. He is trusted in Washington to be loyal to the alliance.

He is respected in Moscow as a man who genuinely has sought to ease tensions between East and West and whose country has a powerful interest in regaining that easier relationship of days past that was called "detente."

He arrived in Moscow with one important additional advantage. He had just succeeded at the Western summit meeting in Venice in toning down and calming down the Carter administration's Afghan policy. And everyone knew Schmidt was the man most responsible for the change.

Thus the German chancellor could say to the Soviets that it now is their turn to calm down and tone down the words and actions of the day and permit a breathing spell during which tensions might at the least get no worse.

We on the outside do not know today and probably will not be able to judge for weeks or months whether this peace-making mission has enjoyed success. The public speeches at a meeting of this kind and at such a delicate moment in history mean little. The important work is done quietly behind the scenes.

The serious question is whether the German chancellor was able to get through to the Soviets and get them to realize that their invasion of Afghanistan has set in motion in the rest of the world a trend that in the end can do them much damage and harm.

The Soviet leaders at the Kremlin in Moscow are sensitive to what others do to them, but often show little awareness of how their actions affect and influence others.

Perhaps Schmidt could bring them to realize the cause and effect relationship between their invasion of Afghanistan and some surprising recent events in Washington. Most surprising of all has been the passage through Congress of a bill providing funds to begin registration of men for possible military service.

There has been a minor vocal opposition from expectable left-wing sources, but nothing spectacular. The registration bill passed the Senate in Washington June 12 by a vote of 58 to 34. It passed the House June 25 by 234 to 168. Those were wide margins in favor of the measure, which certainly never could have passed either house a year before.

The idea of reviving the draft for military service was presumed in politcial circles to be so unpopular that the leading Republican candidates all opposed it during the recent presidential primaries. The record shows candidate Ronald Reagan still opposed to it. And yet, when the House gave decisive approval to registration, there was so little general attention that you had to search the inside pages of most newspapers to find it.

The unthinkable idea of reviving the draft has become thinkable in the wake of the invasion of Afghanistan. Most Americans seem to have accepted the idea that that time has come to look to their arms.

Think how different things would be today had the Soviets resisted the temptation to send Cuban troops into Angola and Ethiopia, and then send their own troops into Afghanistan.

The first two deeds sent warning signals through the U.S. body politic. They provided ammunition to the publicists and pamphleteers on the hawk side. They prepared the soil. But they were not decisive.

But the invasion of Afghanistan did move the U.S. decisively. Congress has not only prepared the ground for reviving the draft, but also is ready to give Carter any funds he asks for refurbishing the arsenals. They may even give him more than he asks. The Americans have been jolted into a rearming mood.

Schmidt undoubtedly has done his best in Moscow to get the Soviet leaders to realize that this is something they have done. If they are made uneasy by it, they have only themselves to blame. The American giant slipped into a soporific mood after Vietnam. If the Soviets had remained quiet and passive, that somnolent mood might have lasted a long time, certainly well beyond today.

Sudan trying to handle mounting refugee roll

Alistair Matheson

KHARTOUM — Sudan has failed to get the $50 million it urgently requested from the world community to help it cope with 500,000 refugees sheltering in the hinterland from upheavals in neighboring countries.

Few substantial pledges came from the 27 governments represented at an almost-unnoticed three-day conference last month in Khartoum on the refugee crisis in the Horn of Africa.

The Sudanese have failed repeatedly to secure the voluntary repatriation of the majority of the refugees. Some will remain within its borders for many years; others may have to be absorbed into Sudanese society.

Sudan has refused to turn back anyone from neighboring states seeking asylum. Consequently it now has fugitives from the fighting in Ethiopia, Uganda and Chad. The financial burden is intolerable.

The Khartoum conference in late June was attended by representatives of several Arab states and Arab banking institutions, as well as by relief workers from 58 international voluntary agencies.

Some of the relief organizations felt that the Sudan's failure to reach the hoped-for aid target of $50 million was partly due to the government's own reluctance to spell out the main cause of the refugee influx.

Only once during the discussions was any reference made to the savage war being waged against secessionists by the Ethiopian army: The governor of Sudan's Kassala province said guardedly that the steady trickle of Ethiopian refugees "grew into a flood" in 1975, leaving listeners to recall for themselves this was the year after the revolution in Ethiopia.

Aware of the recent improvement in relations between the Sudan and Ethiopia, most delegates tactfully avoided the awkward issue. Even on the subject of Ugandan refugees, they refrained from political remarks.

This did not deter Libya's ambassador, Wahab el Zintani, from launching a bitter attack on the British delegate, Foreign Office Minister Neil Marten, for referring to Afghanistan and "communist barbarism" in Asia.

The Libyan ambassador demanded: "Who is the British minister to talk about barbarism? What about . . . the fact that the Palestinian refugees have suffered longer and in larger numbers than any other refugees?"

Realizing he was out of order in a conference on Sudan refugees, he left it at that and said Libya's Council of Ministers was considering what help Libya could give to the Sudan.

The United States delegate dashed Sudanese hopes for immediate aid from Washington when he said his government felt any assistance should be channelled through the United Nations.

For the voluntary agencies the conference provided a real breakthrough, however, with the Sudanese authorities at last agreeing that foreign relief workers can operate directly in the refugee settlements. Until now they have been unable to assist, other than through Sudan's Commissioner for Refugees.

Some relief workers said the main problem is that many Sudanese are the suffering more than the refugees, especially in the southern provinces.

One worker, just returned from eastern Equatoria, where famine is as bad as in Uganda's Karamoja, said: "Things are really desperate there and whole communities face starvation. They are also suffering from highly contagious diseases, yet nothing can be done because they are too remote from government medical facilities."

U.S., Bonn bound together in turbulent marriage

David Binder

WASHINGTON — Periodically over the last three years acrimony has boiled up in relations between the United States and its most important ally, West Germany, over issues of arms control, economic policy, nuclear exports and, most recently, over basic perceptions of East-West relations.

As in a long marriage, to which the 30-year-old Bonn-Washington relationship has sometimes been compared, the quarrels have always been patched up.

So it was again after Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's meetings in Moscow with Leonid Brezhnev, the Soviet leader, an action initially viewed by the Carter administration as not being in harmony with its own policy toward the Soviet Union since the December 1979 intervention in Afghanistan.

The latest patching-up occurred when Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher told Carter that West German initiative had extracted a Soviet concession on future discussions with the West of the strategic arms balance in Europe. The president voiced his "admiration."

However exaggerated some of the recent disputes may have seemed and however much they may have derived, as many believe, from temperamental differences between Schmidt and Carter, there have been some more enduring changes over the last dozen years in the Bonn-Washington relationship.

They have arisen in part out of a growing West German awareness of a national self-interest and in part from Washington's occasional inability to persuade Bonn that American policies were always right.

The most evident changes are in Bonn's emergence from relative political islolation and the loss of feeling like a client of the United States. The loss of that status is symbolized by the termination of Bonn's payment of funds to compensate for the cost of stationing American troops in West Germany in the early 1970s and the ascendancy of the West German mark.

But it was the normalization treaties with the Soviet Union and its allies that provided West Germany with the flexibility it had been denied.

The fact that West Germany had already established itself as the dominant economic power within the Common Market served to strengthen its freedom of action.

The short ups and long downs of the Soviet-American relationship since President Richard Nixon concluded his wide-ranging arms agreements in 1972 with Brezhnev have tended to highlight the divergency in views between Bonn and Washington on the central issue of how to deal with the Soviet Union.

For Washington, particularly under President Carter, the relationship with Moscow has been treated almost as a faucet that could be turned off or on. For Bonn, in the decade of its treaty ties, the relationship with Moscow has become a permanent aspect of its foreign relations, augmented by sizable trade and other exchanges, including the repatriation of hundreds of thousands of ethnic Germans from Eastern Europe.

These divergencies in perspective derive quite naturally from differences of size and location as well as from history. Like them or not, Germans know that the Russians are near neighbors. Most Americans do not feel that about the Russians.

The differences in perspective, along with West Germany's relative growth in power and America's relative decline in influence, were embodied for an instant in Genscher's flying visit to Paris and Washington to brief French and American leaders on the details of the Schmidt-Brezhnev meetings.

One reason why elements of distrust will probably persist is that despite all the telephone and letter exchanges that continue between Schmidt and Carter, and despite the steady stream of West German officials visiting Washington, there has been a general decline in interest on the part of Americans in West German affairs during the last six years.

But moments of distrust or not, and despite the quarrels, the Bonn-Washington marriage seems likely to continue indefinitely without the help of counselling or the pressure of in-laws, simply because the two partners depend so heavily on each other for security.

Ethiopian aid pleas fall on war-weary ears

Avon Priestly

ADDIS ABABA — The Soviet-backed Ethiopian government is appealing for a big increase in emergency supplies to help save its people from the effects of war and drought in the south-western part of the country, including the Ogaden.

According to Ethiopia, Somali forces have stepped up attacks across the Ogaden border. Certainly the drought is approaching the disaster level of 1973.

The head of Ethiopia's Relief and Rehabilitation Committee, Shimelis Adugna, said: "We are working under very difficult conditions. There is a big security problem in the area."

He claimed Somali guerrillas were attacking government buildings and abducting people. Their main targets were schools, health centres and agricultural development programs.

When I visited the Ogaden I was told by an Ethiopian relief official in Dire Dawa that trucks were not getting through with emergency supplies because of repeated ambushes by Somali forces.

The last convoy to reach Dire Dawa took two weeks to travel 180 miles and had to be escorted by an Ethiopian force of battalion strength.

Supplies usually have to be flown to the seven resettlement camps in the region. Only one aircraft is available, a DC-3 with a load limit of two tons.

Each camp holds up to 10,000 people. They need food and drugs to fight advanced malnutrition, TB and malaria. In one camp I visited, a three-month-old girl had died that morning because there was no baby food.

"I am asking for 38,000 tons of milk powder and other high-protein foods. We don't even have offers of 3,000 tons as of now," Shimelis said.

A top-level United Nations mission has just completed a tour of the region and its recommendations for aid were published in Geneva. According to Ethiopia the recommendations fall far short of the country's needs.

The mission recommended 150,000 tonnes of cereals; Ethiopia had asked for nearly three times that much. A demand for 240 trucks and pick-ups had been reduced to about 50, although the UN had recommended the supply of three more aircraft.

Access to federal jobs depends on residence

OTTAWA (CP) — People may have the right to work in whatever province they want, but thousands have been refused government jobs because of where they live, a spokesman for the Public Service Commission said this week.

Gaeten Jeaurond said the commission's system for hiring people would break down if it opened government jobs to every qualified person in the country.

Prime Minister Trudeau told delegates at the Liberal party convention in Winnipeg on the weekend that the federal government must stand behind the rights of Canadians to work in the province of their choice.

"It's the right of every Canadian to move where he wants, to seek a job where he wants and buy property where he wants in this country," Trudeau said.

"What Trudeau said was quite valid," Jeaurond said. "People should be able to work where they want.

"The elementary fact is that for the great portion of positions, it wouldn't be bright to open it up to everyone in Canada. The system would break down."

As a result "tens of thousands" of people had been turned down for jobs because of where they lived.

But those refusals had been made in accordance with guides established by the commission, which was responsible for all the government's hiring, firing and promotion, he said.

He said the guidelines were based on the commission's interpretation of the Public Service Employment Act, passed by Parliament in the mid 1960s.

"It's an Act of Parliament. You have to follow the rules."

His field of battle

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — The president of the fledgling Canadian Farmworkers Union says he's determined to fight for better working conditions and pay for his members.

So far, few people outside of the fields have heard of Raj Chouhan, 31, who has gathered more than 500 members to his cause.

"To get support from the other workers, you have to convince them that your struggle is a just struggle, that you're not in the struggle just to promote yourself or achieve something for yourself," he says.

"I'm from the Sikh religion and in their history, if you go 300 years back, you find hundreds of struggles that had been fought just to maintain their dignity and to win some rights," Chouhan said.

Photos of village life in India dot the walls of the New Westminster home which he and his wife Inder, 25, bought two years ago. They first met 11 years ago in India and were separated when Inder came to Canada in 1970. Three years later she sponsored Chouhan's entry into Canada and they married.

They both worked in the fields, until he found other jobs in a chemical plant, and later, a plywood mill.

Mrs. Chouhan has a large rash on her back which developed after she worked in a field sprayed with insecticide.

So far, the union has concentrated on the 8,000 to 9,000 workers in the Fraser Valley area, but Chouhan said a union representative went to Osoyoos in the Okanagan Monday to investigate allegations French-Canadian fruit pickers were facing discrimination there.

Chouhan said there was no minimum wage or compensation for injuries for fruit pickers.

Unemployment insurance was available only to those working 26 weeks, eliminating all but a handful from eligibility, he said.

Often a single tub of water provided both drinking and washing water for a few dozen workers, and the 12-hour work day was usual, he said.

Pay for a 16-pound flat of fruit is about $2.50, of which up to 40 per cent is deducted by labor contractors for transporting workers to the farms, Chouhan said.

A day's work, averaged thoughout the season, usually meant about $22.

B.C. Labor Minister Jack Heinrich has promised to introduce legislation giving farm workers the same basic protection available to other workers but Chouhan said the struggle could be bitter.

"Things will most likely be nasty on the picket line," he predicts. "This union doesn't believe in violence but that doesn't mean we won't defend ourselves if there is that kind of fight on the picket line."

Strike talk brings on rare old thirst

KELOWNA(CP) — Strike rumors are causing beer shortages at a local beer distribution warehouse as people prepare for the possibility of a shortage from a labor dispute in the brewery industry, a spokesman for Pacific Brewers Distributors said.

Negotiations have been continuing between union workers and management at B.C.'s three major breweries for a new collective agreement and a spokesman for one of the companies said Tuesday he has received no reports that would give cause for concern.

However, a distribution spokesmen here said "the beer is going out as fast as the trucks can bring it in.

"We are experiencing shortages on a day-to-day basis," he said. "People are stocking up and you can't really blame them . . . nobody knows what is going on."

Spokesmen for local government liquor vendors say they have not experienced customers bulk buying beer, but noted that warm weather and increased tourist traffic have increased demand for the product.

Warren stands in front of his shop

Store owner giving it college try

Colonist correspondent

PARKSVILLE — Maybe you can't fight city hall but Doug Warren is giving it a try.

The Stedmans store owner has been ordered to tear down the recently-built garden shop outside his Craig Street store because it conflicts with a Parksville parking bylaw.

But Warren feels the bylaw is too strict.

He says there are plenty of parking spaces around his store, even at Christmas.

"There really isn't a parking problem in this town," he says, "unless you want to go to the store and park three feet from the door."

Warren says his lawyer told him he wouldn't need a building permit and he was unaware of the zoning bylaw.

Each business must provide one parking space for every 215.2 square feet of retail space.

The garden shop, which is located in the store's parking lot, reduces the number of spaces and increases the size of the store.

Pat Colton of Parksville's parking commission says the bylaw is designed to improve the parking situation in Parksville.

In some cases, parking is inadequate, he says.

For example, a 600-square-foot corner grocery store must provide only three spaces.

Even if there is just a single sales clerk, that leaves only two spaces for customers.

"I believe they (the bylaws) are self-serving," says Colton.

"There is flexibility within the bylaws, depending upon the type of development it is."

The bylaw was passed in February of 1979 by the highways planning department.

It replaced an old bylaw and doubled the number of spaces required.

Dave Raven of the highway planning office in Nanaimo says one reason for the stricter zoning may be because Parksville is located next to a highway.

Traffic congestion in Parksville could affect the flow of highway traffic.

But Parksville engineer Mel Hughes says two years ago town council recommended that one parking spot be required for every 400 square feet of commercial property.

The proposal was rejected by the department of highways because some commercial properties require more parking spaces.

But rather than developing special parking categories the department of highways increased the parking ratio to the highest level in B.C., says Hughes.

Warren's main concern is that many of Parksville's run-down buildings will remain standing because few merchants can afford to build on part of the lot and use the rest for parking.

But if there is a parking shortage, people will be discouraged from shopping in Parksville, says Colton.

Two years ago, a plan to build a central parking lot was rejected because of its cost.

Warren is also concerned about losing business to outside centres, but says he also hates to chase his garden business out of town.

Meanwhile, his shop can stay up for the season but he must tear it down in the fall or find somewhere else to put it.

Four-death crash Sept. 18

Three crucial questions posed at inquest

By DONNA REIMER
Colonist correspondent

NANAIMO — Why did pilot Ray Crandall fly into a fog bank shortly before his Pacific Coastal Airlines flight crashed last Sept. 18 on a hillside near Port Hardy?

Was the pilot flying without having passed his annual proficiency check?

Why did Pacific Coastal chief pilot, who was later fired, file a report with the transport ministry charging "discrepancies" in the airline's operation?

All of those questions were raised during the second day of the inquest into the Sept. 18 crash which killed four of the nine people aboard the plane, including pilot Crandall.

One of the questions may never be answered.

Former Pacific Coastal owner Don MacGillivray may shed some light on the other questions when he takes the witness stand today.

There could only be speculation as to why Crandall flew the twin-engine Islander into the fog bank.

When asked to speculate, Chris Chandler, another Pacific Coastal pilot and a friend and Gabriola Island neighbor of Crandall's, said that perhaps the pilot thought he had a way back out of the fog.

"I can only say that a pilot usually leaves a back door," Chandler said.

"Maybe that back door closed."

Chandler said that it would have been reasonable for a pilot receiving the weather information available at Comox that September morning to "have a look-see" at the weather by flying toward the reported fog.

Testimony from Alan McNutt, who started work as chief pilot of Pacific Coastal on Sept. 14, raised the questions about whether Crandall was flying legally and what had prompted a Sept. 12 and 13 base inspection of Pacific Coastal's facilities at Cassidy by the transport ministry.

McNutt testified that Pacific Coastal's own records seemed to indicate that Crandall's last annual pilot proficiency check was on Aug. 31, 1978, meaning the pilot would have been flying illegally in September of 1979.

McNutt also said while answering questions from crown counsel Neil Robertson that the base investigation of Pacific Coastal was made in reponse to a report filed by the previous chief pilot.

That report outlined what the former chief pilot believed were "discrepancies" in the airline's operation.

McNutt said he had no knowledge of why his predecessor was later relieved of his duties.

Testimony in the inquest is expected to be completed today or Friday.

Coroner W. J. Carpenter of the transportation section of the provincial coroner's office in Vancouver, is conducting the inquest.

Some anxious moments

Mill Bay firemen tried their best but couldn't prevent fire from gutting Cobble Hill home earlier this week. Firemen had to sift carefully through debris as there were reports of a person being trapped in blaze, but it was later confirmed dwelling was abandoned.

Nanaimo region crown counsel

Bledsoe resigns

Canadian Press

NANAIMO — Nanaimo regional crown counsel Richard Bledsoe has resigned, effective July 1, after being suspended for professional misconduct by the B.C. Law Society, a spokesman for the provincial attorney-general's ministry has announced.

Dennis Murray, a counsel staff lawyer, has temporarily taken over as regional crown counsel.

A law society statement said its disciplinary committee suspended Bledsoe for three months starting July 1 and ordered him to pay the $250 hearing costs plus disbursements.

The suspension stems from an incident which occurred when Bledsoe was in private practice in this city, prior to taking the position of crown counsel Oct. 1, 1976.

The law society's committee said Bledsoe was knowingly giving a client false explanations and assurances about a legal matter, falsely advising the client he had issued a lawsuit and falsely making statements to the client about another lawyer's supposed misconduct, which he knew to be untrue.

Big reward in blaze

DUNCAN — Arson has been blamed for the razing of Island Shake and Shingle Ltd.'s Lake Cowichan sawmill May 16.

Insurance companies have posted a $25,000 reward for information leading to the conviction of the arsonist responsible for the fire.

Coast Claims Ltd. of Victoria, insurance adjusters in the million-dollar fire, announced the reward following a joint meeting attended by members of the fire commissioner's office, RCMP and the insurance companies, who agreed that the fire was definitely caused by arson.

Coast Claims president Jim Eisler told the Colonist that although the reward was high, so were the stakes.

"It was a fairly large fire, with something in the area of $1 million in insurance claims involved.

"The reward is being offered because arson is on the upswing and becoming something of a problem," Eisler added.

"Insurance companies are becoming concerned because of the high cost to the public of arson."

Eisler said he did not know whether the two insurance companies involved (one Canadian and one American), which stand to lose somewhere in the region of $1 million between them, had decided to pay the amount yet.

"There is a very intensive investigation going on and I imagine they are awaiting the results of that investigation.

"It's not unusual for companies to delay payment during such an investigation."

Meanwhile, Ed Taylor of the Nanaimo fire marshal's office has paid tribute to the team of investigators of Duncan RCMP Constable Ken Handy, Lake Cowichan RCMP Constable Ken Yaeger and special investigator Steve Bunyk of the insurance bureau of crime prevention, who worked on the investigation.

"We worked well together as a team on this fire. We will be using this type of team concept more and more in investigating fires on Vancouver Island," Taylor said.

Taylor added "the investigation of this fire is almost at a dead end. The offering of the reward may prompt some more leads in the case."

"We know that a crime has been committed but we still do not know who did it.

"It's not difficult to find a motive for the arson but pinning it down on any one individual is another matter."

Petition denied

COURTENAY — A petition by three local residents to prevent construction of a 17th Street crossing until after a public hearing, has been dismissed.

The petition was heard in B.C. Supreme Court in Vancouver by Mr. Justice W. J. Wallace.

The highways ministry was represented by Brian Barrington-Foot.

The decision said there was no obligation on the minister (Highways Minister Alex Fraser) to hold a public hearing and therefore the petition did not present a reasonable cause.

It wasn't mentioned in court but a public hearing on the issue was held about a year ago with some 600 persons attending.

"It was the biggest public hearing ever held in Courtenay," a local observer pointed out Wednesday.

Region picture brighter

NANAIMO — Labor problems which led to a 2½-day walkout at the Nanaimo Regional District in May should be solved by recommendations approved by the regional board this week.

The board's select committee that had been appointed to consider the concerns of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 401, had made three recommendations to the board.

The recommendations had received the unanimous approval of the committee, which included union representatives.

Under the solution worked out by the committee, the demand of the union that assistant regional administrator Gordon Summers be relieved of labor relations work was withdrawn.

In addition, Summers was specifically assigned to sort out problems between switchboard operators and other workers and to start a orientation program for new employees.

The board also agreed with the recommendation to establish a labor-management committee, with staff and union representatives to first explore the problem of employee morale.

The board also agreed to instruct its supervisory personnel, in writing, to adhere to the intent and purpose of the collective agreement with CUPE.

Supervisory staff will also be asked to attempt to resolve grievances at their early stages in an effort to avoid arbitration.

"WHO IS CRYING NOW." That was the comment of a happy but surprisingly subdued Harvey Stevenson following Victoria Budgets' doubleheader sweep of the Canadian national team.

The Budgets downed the national team 3-1 and 4-1 before a near-capacity crowd at Royal Athletic Park.

It was a satisfying sweep for the players, the fans and particularly for Stevenson who was upset over comments made by Emil Sabourin, the Canadian team's chef de mission.

Sabourin had called Stevenson a crier and said that he expected special treatment from the national team — treatment that he said Stevenson didn't give when he coached the pick-up bolstered Budgets to the Pan-American Games gold medal last summer.

In rebuttal, Stevenson says, "I never kept anyone away from his team for more than two weekends during all the time we toured. There was one weekend for the Arizona tour and one weekend in Santa Rosa."

Stevenson had three pickups last year, pitchers Cliff Bishop of Winnipeg and Rob Guenter of Saskatoon and second baseman Tom Henderson of Halifax.

Ironically, Guenter now pitches for Budgets and was the centre of controversy this year. He has been shuffled back and forth between St. Catharines, home of the national team, and Victoria and Stevenson feels the Canadian team could have been more considerate of Budgets' needs.

BUDGETS HAVE heavy league and Super Series schedules but only three pitchers this year. When Guenter is gone Smith and Wilson must carry the load and if one of them should get hurt the Budgets would have big problems.

Smith did suffer a 30-stitch cut to his non-pitching arm and Wilson had to be hospitalized a couple of days because of a kidney ailment but fortunately neither missed much throwing time.

Stevenson says that third baseman John Green, also picked up by the nationals, was never a factor in the problems.

"We didn't mind if he played for the national team against us because we have plenty of depth in the infield."

Budgets have been without Guenter for eight of their last 10 Super Series games but have managed to win seven of those eight, including three of four from the U.S. national team and the sweep over Canada.

Beating the Canadian team without the use of Guenter and Green only made the victories that much sweeter for Stevenson.

WHEN YOU'RE the ones who lost the year before it's difficult to complain, even legitimately, without being tagged sore losers.

That's what Stevenson and the Budgets are up against but when you feel you're right, speak out, and that's what Stevenson has done.

Sabourin also spoke out and that's good but he also provided some incorrect information regarding the performance of the Canadian team against the U.S. team.

Presumably Sabourin was at the games involving the two clubs but he may not have been. Anyway he said that Canada was 1-3 in Midland and that the clubs split a doubleheader in St. Catharines.

Everyone else questioned, including players of the Canadian and U.S. teams, says Canada was 0-4 in Midland and 0-2 in St. Catharines.

Maybe the problem is that administrators like Sabourin should stick to the paperwork and leave the field work to the manager and coach.

The club concept is still preferable to an all-star format. Budgets proved last year that it can work well but the manager and coach must have full power over who is to be picked up and to who plays when. Keep the bureaucrats off the field.

Hopefully Canada will come around in time for the worlds, which start Friday in Tacoma, and hopefully Green and Guenter will lead the way to victory.

How about Canada winning the final 1-0 on a no-hitter by Guenter and a home run by Green?

Valentine leads Whitecap charge

Carl Valentine notched his second three-goal performance of the season as Vancouver Whitecaps blanked Atlanta Chiefs 4-0 in a North American Soccer League game Wednesday night.

Goalkeeper Bruce Grobbalar protected a shutout before 2,878 Atlanta fans as the Whitecaps improved their record to 11-11.

Vancouver got the only goal it needed at 10:53 in the first half when Ray Hankin deflected a header off Atlanta defender Tony Whelan, past goalkeeper Bill Mishalow and into the goal. Valentine picked up an assist on the play.

Valentine scored his first at 27:15 with an assist from Trevor Whymark, then gave his team a 3-0 halftime lead with an unassisted tally.

Valentine's third of the night and seventh of the season came at 73:35, with assists from Rudy Krol and Buzz Parsons.

The loss dropped Atlanta to 5-15.

In other games: New York Cosmos edged Philadelphia Fury 2-1; Rochester Lancers shut out Portland Timbers 2-0; Fort Lauderdale Strikers downed Detroit 3-1; Tampa Bay Rowdies dumped San Jose Earthquake 4-1; Minnesota Kicks outscored Tulsa Roughnecks 5-4; Los Angeles Aztec edged California Surf 3-2; San Diego Sockers blanked Washington Diplomats 2-0 and Dallas Tornado beat Chicago Sting 4-2.

Giorgio Chinaglia scored a pair of goals to power the Cosmos to victory before 31,278 fans at East Rutherford, N.J.

Chinaglia's goals, his 22nd and 23rd of the season, bettered the goal scoring total of the entire Philadelphia team's season and put him into first place in the NASL scoring race.

Chinaglia opened scoring for the Cosmos at 43:09 when he put a cross from Angelo DiBernardon past goalkeeper Bob Rigby.

The Fury battled back to even the count at 61:35 but Chinaglia put the Cosmos ahead for good at the 71:15 mark when he took a pass from Johan Neeskens.

The victory was the Cosmos' fourth in a row and improved their record to 16-5. The Fury, coached by former Cosmos coach Eddie Firmani, suffered its second straight setback and slipped to 6-14.

At Portland, Pat Ercoli and Bronco Segota scored the goals and Enzo DiPede earned his third shutout of the season.

Portland outshot Rochester 22-16.

The Lancers improved their record 10-9 with 82 points in the National Conference East. Portland remains in last place in the National West with a 6-14 record and 55 points.

The Tampa Bay victory was sparked by Oscar Fabbiani and captain Jan Van Der Veen.

Fabbiani scord two goals and Van Der Veen assisted on three goals while Neill Roberts, the team's leading scorer, had a goal and an assist.

Tampa Bay dominated the first half, scoring four goals between 11:21 and 36:27 before 15,809 fans. San Jose changed goalkeepers in the second half and Chris Turner prevented any further Rowdie goals.

The first Rowdies' goal was the most controversial play of the game. Fabbiani took a pass from Van Der Veen and appeared to be caught by an offside trap. Fabbiani, last year's leading NASL scorer, kept moving and headed the ball into the goal as San Jose protested.

Linesman Robert Donahue crashed to the ground in a collision with a protesting San Jose player, Hans Kraay Jr. Kraay helped Donahue up but received a yellow card for dissent. A few minutes later in a continuing protest, Best also was cautioned.

The win leaves the Rowdies at 13-9, one point behind the first place Fort Lauderdale Strikers in the American Conference Eastern Division, while San Jose dropped to 6-15.

Esks win, Als lose in openers

Grey Cup finalists Edmonton Eskimos and Montreal Alouettes opened their 1980 schedules in very different fashion Wednesday.

The seemingley impregnable Grey Cup champion Eskimos humbled Winnipeg Blue Bombers 36-13 in a Canadian Football League game at Edmonton while the Alouettes were stunned 18-11 by perennial also-ran Toronto Argonauts at Toronto.

The Blue Bombers were considered by most football observers to be the most improved team in the Western Conference but they failed miserably in their first big test.

The Eskimos manhandled the Bombers in the first half, building a 29-3 lead.

Veteran quarterback Tom Wilkinson threw three touchdown passes in the second quarter to spark the Eskimos, utilizing the best set of receivers in the CFL.

Wilkinson picked apart the Winnipeg secondary in the 30 minutes he played. He directed Edmonton to scores five of the seven times they had the ball in the first half.

Tom Scott had two touchdown receptions for Edmonton, while Brian Kelly and Waddell Smith also caught touchdown passes. Running back Neil Lumsden, acquired during the off-season, opened the scoring for Edmonton on a seven-run touchdown run at 9:16 of the first quarter. Dave Cutler converted all five touchdowns and Hank Ilesic added a 52-yard single for the Eskimos.

Winnipeg opened the scoring early in the first quarter on Trevor Kennerd's 45-yard field goal, but couln't get on the scoreboard again until Mike Holmes scored on a 14-yard TD pass at 5:39 of third quarter. Kennerd converted that and wound up the scoring with a 29-yard field goal in the final minute of the quarter.

At Toronto, Dave Newman set the stage for the Toronto upset when he scored on an electrifying 72-yard pass from quarterback Mark Jackson in he first quarter.

The Argos, playing before a home-opening crowd of 32,250 at Exhibition Stadium, were not expected to offer last year's Eastern Conference winners more than token opposition this early in the season. The Als, Grey Cup finalist the last three years, were undefeated in four exhibition games, while the Argos went 0-4.

Zenon Andrusyshyn, who connected on three field goals in the first half as the Argos moved into a 16-10 lead, missed on three key second-half attempts and had to settle for two singles on those occasions.

Blues get new blood for division chase

Victoria Blues have picked up some extra bodies for their battle for the Northern Division pennant race in Northwest League baseball.

Paul Stevens, a 26-year-old infielder-outfielder, has been signed as a player coach while Eric Snider, a righthander from Washington State University, has been picked up to bolster the pitching corps.

More good news came on the medical front when it was learned catcher Don Hyman will be able to play within two or three games.

Hyman had been hit with a pitch and was feared out for the season with a broken arm. The most recent diagnosis, however, is a badly-bruised arm.

Blues played the A's in Medford, Ore., Wednesday night. Results of the game were not available at press time.

Going into the game, centre-fielder Lazondo Washington was leading the team in batting with a .365 mark.

Following him among the regulars were playing-manager Jim Gattis, .340 and a team-leading two home runs, and shortstop Rod Murphy, .310.

Coe and Smith last Island hope

VANCOUVER — Dawn Coe and Joanne Smith are left to carry the colors for Vancouver Island in the B.C. women's golf championship.

Coe, a resident of Lake Cowichan and member of both March Meadows and Cowichan Golf Clubs, defeated Paula Phillips of Vancouver 3 and 2 in the opening round of match play Wednesday at Shaugnessy Golf Club while Smith of Royal Colwood edged Patty Grant of Prince George on the 21st hole.

They were the only two Islanders to survive as Dorothy De Girolamo, the 1975 B.C. champion from Gorge Vale, was upset on the 20th hole by Jane Cousins of Vancouver.

Pat Derry of Colwood, the only other Island competitor in the 16-player championship flight, lost 2 and 1 to Val Westall of Vancouver Marine Drive.

In other matches: Medalist Gail Moore of Vancouver thumped Lorraine McKenzie of Marine Drive 5 and 4; Flo McFall of Quilchena edged Janie Geety of Vancouver 2 and 1; Lynn Cook of Vancouver beat Lora Iwasaki of Vancouver 4 and 3; and Lisa Young of Prince George beat Val Young of Marine Drive 5 and 4.

Today Moore plays McFall, Cook takes on Smith, Coe plays Cousins and Young meets Westell.

No semi-final upsets in city tennis action

There were no surprises in the Victoria City Open Tennis Tournament Wednesday as top seeds gained final berths at Oak Bay Tennis Club.

Peter Smythe and Russ Hartley advanced to the men's singles final and Enid Jackson and Sandra Moss advanced to the women's singles final.

All finals will be played Saturday at Oak Bay with A events starting at 1 p.m.

Smythe, seeded first defeated unseeded Art McCracken 6-1, 6-0 while Hartley, seeded second, defeated third seed Martin Taylor 3-6, 6-3, 7-3.

Jackson, the top women's seed, downed fifth-seeded Valerie Brice 6-1, 6-3 while Moss, seeded second, defeated unseeded Damaris Hurley 4-6, 6-3, 6-4.

In a men's doubles semi-final, Hartley and Taylor combined to defeat Peter Smythe and Mike Sheikh 6-4, 3-6, 6-2 while in a women's semi-final Wendy Cuppage and Ann Graham beat Andrea Wiles and Moss 6-3, 6-4.

Play continues today.

Jorgensen completes long road back

Colonist N.Y. Times Service

NEW YORK — Mike Jorgensen remembers being wheeled into the intensive-care unit "with all those nurses standing around me." He also remembers the pitch that hit him behind the ear, giving him a blood clot, and he also remembers his lack of aggressiveness when he tried to play baseball again last year.

Some players never get over being hit in the head. Either their vision is impared, or their reflexes are altered, or they move their feet six vital inches farther from home plate. But Mike Jorgensen, with a new spiritual outlook on his career, has cast aside those memories this season while batting a valuable .287 for the New York Mets.

Last week when a pitch sailed at his head, he responded with a sudden fury that touched off a brawl with the Montreal Expos that may produce bad blood between the two teams the rest of this season.

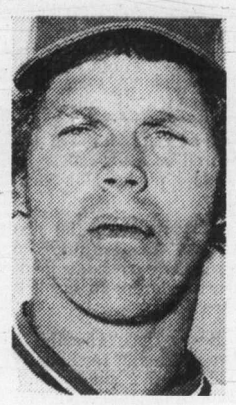

Even if Jorgensen had not responded angrily, John Stearns and other Mets would still have rushed the mound because, as Joe Torre, manager of the Mets, puts it: "my guys know what Mike went through."

A curly-haired blond from Bayside, a few minutes from Shea Stadium, Jorgensen played with the Mets in parts of three seasons before moving on to Montreal, Oakland and Texas where he thought he had found a home at first base and in the open suburbs of Arlington. The kid from Queens now favors smokeless tobacco, cowboy boots and broad cowboy hats.

In May 1979, the new Texan was having a fine start with the Rangers — until May 28, when he was hit behind the right ear by Andy Hassler of Boston. He has no reason to believe Hassler was throwing at him; still, he would have liked Hassler to tell him that — "maybe just a get-well card." The two men have never spoken.

Although suffering headaches, he returned to uniform after the beaning, even pinch-hitting on May 31, but "I complained so much, I got on my wife's nerves, and she told me to see a doctor."

While in the hospital for observation, Jorgensen suffered a seizure from the blood clot, waking up in the intensive-care unit and thinking, "I'm in better shape than the people around me. At least I'm awake."

Jorgensen

While doctors eliminated the clot with medication, Jorgensen says, "I knew I'd play again. Maybe the average person would say, 'the hell with this,' but professional athletes refuse to admit this to themselves."

Nevertheless, while taking medicine, his body weak, his vision shaky, Jorgensen never drove in a run the rest of the season, playing only 49 more games and seeing his average fall to .223. He says nobody treated him with pity, as a player whose career was jeopardized, but at the end of the season the Rangers unloaded him to the Mets.

"I was upset, not because it was the Mets but because it was a sign the end was coming closer. When you're young, you think you should play every day til you're 35 or 40. Then all of a sudden it's a lot closer."

If this was to be a terminal stage in his career, Jorgensen made up his mind to do it right. In the off season he resumed a form of self hypnosis he had learned when the Rangers had hired a team psychologist.

"I'd lie down, staying totally conscious, in a mental state where I could picture myself doing certain things. I'd project goals for myself. I'd imagine myself stroking the ball to left center, having the ball hit the fence on one bounce."

When he was younger, Jorgensen had tried to power everything to right field. At 31, he recognized his best stroke was to left center, and that he would be playing only against right-handed pitching. How did he accept this role?

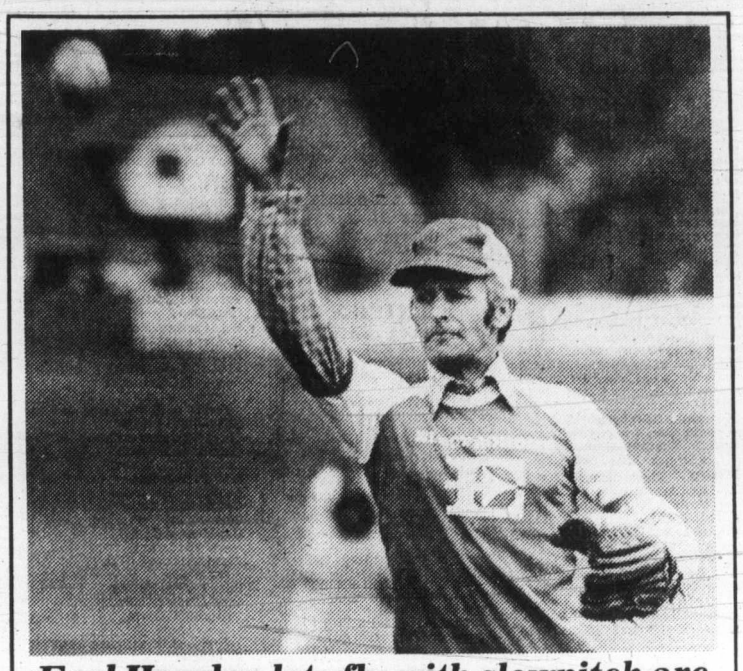

"Since the injury, I've had a different way of looking at things," he said Wednesday.

Last Friday Jorgensen came to bat after Joel Youngblood had hit a homer to put the Mets ahead. With two strikes, Bill Gullickson fired a pitch "that would have hit me in the head if I hadn't moved pretty darn fast."

Getting up from the dust, Jorgensen strode toward the mound, looking as if he were ready to fight. He says, "I was just telling him there are plenty of ways to throw at me without throwing at my head."

After the teams brawled and Stearns was ejected, Jorgensen had to go back and hit. He has always admired Tony Perez, Tommie Agee and Steve Henderson as three men who could bounce back from a dusting with a base hit. His single off Gullickson was as pleasing a hit as anything he has done.

A few innings later, Jorgensen called Gullickson on the telephone from one clubhouse to the other. He says: "I told him I wasn't going to fight him, I just wanted to forget about it. We agreed there are no hard feelings between the two of us. Maybe I overreacted. I've never done anything like that before. I'm not very fond of that incident. I don't want to hurt anybody. I don't want anybody to hurt me."

Earl Howden lets fly with slowpitch arc

Slowpitch softball a hit with recreational crowd

By REG REYNOLDS
Colonist staff

They call it slowpitch but a more apt name might have been highpitch.

The ball does go pretty slow but the most unique thing about this version of softball is that the pitcher must throw the ball high.

It must have a minimum three foot arc when it leaves the pitcher's hand and usually the ball is 10-15 feet above-ground in flight.

Once a batter gets used to the arc, the ball is relatively easy to hit.

This makes for an action-packed recreational game with emphasis on defence.

For the batter, the art is to place the ball away from the defences.

Because it's a game that just about anyone can play, slowpitch has caught on with the masses and is a fast-growing pursuit.

It's been big in the United States for a number of years — they even have pro leagues down there — and has been part of the Victoria sports scene for nine years.

The Victoria Slowpitch Association was formed nine years ago and now encompasses approximately 40 teams of about 15 players each.

A rather loosely-knit organization, the VSA teams played a series of exhibition games and then finished off the year with a tournament.

This didn't satisfy the competitive urges of many of the players so this year a new competitive section of 20 teams was formed under the direction of Larry Hamblin, Dan Green and Ken Armstrong.

The teams are split into two divisions and play proper schedules. The top six teams in each division advance to the playoffs. The top team plays the sixth-place team, two plays five and three plays four and the three winners advance in each division advance to the next round.

The team of the three survivors with the best league record advances to the divisional final while the other two clubs play a best-of-three series. The divisional final is also a best-of-three and the division champions meet in another best-of-three series for the overall championship.

Most of the rules are the same as softball but there are no leadoffs and no stealing and a runner can only advance on a basehit or caught ball.

Although he doesn't throw with any velocity, the pitcher is more than just a lobbing machine. He can put spin on the ball to keep the ball from being hit too far and the good pitchers can throw a curveball.

Strikeouts aren't common but they aren't totally unheard of. Hamblin, who pitches and plays first base, says there are usually two or three a game.

Slowpitch is a long way from senior "A" fastball but it's fun and an excellent form of recreation for the guy who's been sitting behind a desk all day in a downtown office tower.

Also it's cheap. Thirty dollars gets an entire team registered.

Reliever makes most of his chance

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — All he asked for was a chance, an opportunity to prove himself.

Kansas City Royals said no. So did Cincinnati Reds.

But Minnesota Twins decided to take a look at this right-handed reliever and now they and Doug Corbett are five victories and eight saves happier for it.

"I always imagined the big leagues would be like this," said Corbett, who has pitched so well for the Twins this year that Calvin Griffith, owner of the American League baseball team, and manager Gene Mauch saw fit to give Mike Marshall his walking papers early in the season.

Corbett, a former star at the University of Florida, was drafted in 1974 by the Royals, but lasted only one year in the Kansas City organization.

He was claimed by the Reds and toiled successfully in their minor league system for five years. But his brilliant statistics were ignored by the Reds, who never asked Corbett to training camp.

"I went to spring training with them a grand total of none," smiled Corbett, whose 2.15 earned-run average is second best in the AL.

Even though Kansas City and Cincinnati found a way, it's nearly impossible to ignore Corbett's minor league record.

His ERA's since 1974 have been 2.95, 1.99, 2.76, 2.22, 1.48 and 3.00. His innings-pitched have exceeded his hits-allowed in all but one of his six minor league seasons, and he has never issued more walks than strikeouts.

That's pretty solid pitching for anyone to pass over. Corbett, a native of Sarasota, never understood his employer's reluctance.

"They never gave me a reason; never said anything concrete," Corbett said of the Reds. "I've always been respectful of people in positions of authority but there were times when I've questioned decisions, especially when I saw guys being promoted in our organization who I felt were not the calibre of pitcher I was.

"I can only speculate that the Reds wanted an overhand, 90-mile an hour pitcher. I'm a sinker-ball pitcher. They wanted pop-ups and strikeouts. I gave them ground balls."

In 71 innings for the Twins, Corbett has allowed 56 hits. His strikeout-to-walk ratio is 3-to-1. He has become the club's stopper, the pitcher Mauch gives the ball to when the game is on the line.

"You can't get along without people who know how to pitch the eighth and ninth innings," said Mauch. "I'd hate to think where we'd be without Doug."

Last winter, Corbett pitched one month for former Twins' manager Cal Ermer in the Puerto Rican League, where he had a 6-2 record, 2.02 earned run average and 13 saves in 29 games.

That was all Ermer needed to see.

Coaches depart

University of Victoria's athletic department is looking to fill two vacancies on its coaching staff, following the resignations of Jenny John and Chris Marshall.

John, UVic women's field hockey coach, will concentrate on her duties as development co-ordinator for the B.C. Field Hockey Association. She was forced to abandon the UVic position because of a heavy work load and travel commitments.

She took over the Vikettes in September 1978, reaching the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union national semi-finals once and capturing the Vancouver Island League title during the past season.

Marshall, who replaced Al Scott as Viking volleyball coach last year, piloted UVic to a fifth-place finish in the Canada West conference. He will return to Vancouver to continue his education.

Replacements will be announced at a later date.

Rowing crew requires helping hand with trip

HAMILTON (CP) — A lightweight eight crew from the Leander Boat Club, Hamilton, will represent Canada at the world rowing championships next month — provided it can come up with about $20,000 to pay its own way.

"Sport Canada has never sponsored junior or lightweight crews," says Leander president Claude Saunders. "It can't see the continuity from junior and lightweight to the elite heavyweight division."

Now, after having qualified for the world championships Aug. 11-17 in Hazelwinkel, Belgium, there's no money for the trip.

"My understanding is that a sport can't receive funding unless it is an Olympic sport or a feeder to an Olympic sport," says Mike McAlister, coach of the Leander crew. "My thinking is that it's a world championship.

McAlister estimates it will cost $1,800 per man — eight oarsmen, a coxwain and McAlister himself — to go to Belgium. They will take their own oars and rent a boat in Europe. It will be up to them to raise the money, a prospect that certainly hasn't taken any of the zing out of their strokes.

"We've let them know officially that we're going," McAlister. "We've laid the burden of raising the money on our own shoulders.

Hilkes kills deal

Lorenz Hilkes has killed a North American Soccer League deal that would have had him move from Edmonton Drillers to Toronto Blizzard. Hilkes said Wednesday he won't report to the Blizzard but will return home to West Germany.

Hilkes, 29, was the leading Edmonton scorer last season with 13 goals and three assists in 21 games.

Double win for Shenton

Rick Shenton was a double winner Wednesday as Lumberworld outslugged Capital Radiators in Cosmoplitan Senior Baseball League play at Lambrick Park.

Don Holmes stroked a game-winning two-run double in the 10th inning as Lumberworld completed a game postponed earlier with a 5-4 victory and he went three-for-three as Lumberworld outscored Capitals 16-9 in the regular game.

Shenton won the first game in relief and took the second, despite giving up a grand-slam homer to Wayne Proceviat.

In the firt game Capitals went ahead with a run in the tenth but Lumberworld came back when Shenton reached on an error, Russ Holmes walked and then Don Holmes doubled.

Gary Brooke had four hits for Lumberworld in the second game and Russ Holmes clouted a two-run homer.

Cole still hot from Budget win

Fresh from the biggest win of his career, Larry Cole was in peak form at Central Park Wednesday night.

Cole, who pitched Victoria Budgets to victory over the U.S. champions in one of four senior "A" games last weekend, fired a one-hitter as Tally-Ho blanked Juan de Fuca Builders 1-0 in a Stuffy McGinnis Men's League softball game.

The journeyman electrician struck out eight and walked three and the only hit was a one-out single by Rick Emerson in the second inning.

Cole also singled and doubled in three trips but the run he needed came in the fifth inning when Kevin Gilbert doubled with two out, advanced on an error and scored on another error.

In the other game at Central Park, Labatts jumped into fifth place by virtue of a 3-2 win over Tod-Hackett Construction.

The score was 2-2 until the sixth inning when Rick Adams led off with a double, advanced on a sacrifice by Dale Marshall and scored on a groundout by winning pitcher Bob Richdale.

Richdale went the distance and although he struggled early he set them down in order in the last three innings.

Barry Underwood hit a two-run homer for Labatts and added a single while Tom Robertson and Bob Wheeler scored the Tod-Hackett runs.

In the Victoria—Saanich Women's League, Butler Bros. demonstrated that playing in the Canadian natives championships had helped their game.

Gina Olson pitched a five-hitter and Sabrina Black went two-for-three at the plate as Butler Bros. upset first-place Island Dryco Breakers 5-3.

It was the second straight loss for Breakers who were unbeaten in their first 16 games.

Butler Bros. finished second in the Canadian natives tournament behind Nanaimo.

Marilyn Bolton pitched a three-hitter, striking out five and walking none, as Bemister's Welding downed Victoria Athletics 3-1 in the other game at Hyacinth Park.

Sue Ondre had two hits and drove in two runs for Bemister's and Jan Nowell had two hits and drove in the winning run.

In the Heywood Men's League, Marv Carver was tagged for seven hits but managed a shutout as Capital Builders blanked Strathcona Hotel 2-0 at Heywood Avenue Park.

Losing pitcher Ken Greenhalg blanked Capital on four hits through six innings and had two out in the seventh inning when the roof fell in. Carver kept things alive with a single and John Coccioni followed with a home run.

In the Macdonald Park Men's League: Mayfair Insurance outscored Mega-Power 10-7; and The Rebels thumped James Bay Inn 13-2.

Royal Oak needs major rec complex

But study says Saanich population must top 90,000 first

By BILL SMITH
Colonist staff

A major recreation complex will be required in the Royal Oak area of Saanich to meet the needs of future population growth, Saanich council's committee-of-the-whole was told Tuesday.

But to justify construction of such a building Saanich's population would have to increase from the present 78,000 to between 90,000 and 100,000 persons, and that could be a decade away.

THE BAD NEWS for residents of the municipality's northwestern sector was given by Brian Johnson, recreation and environmental consultant of Vancouver, during debate on a master plan for development of recreation facilities in Saanich.

He recommended property be acquired at Royal Oak for long-term development of a community centre.

AN EXPENDITURE of $850,000 over the next five years would be needed to upgrade the three major existing recreation facilities—Gordon Head recreation centre, G.R. Pearkes Arena and Cedar Hill community centre—to "greatly change their identity and make them family-oriented buildings."

Recommended additions to existing facilities over the next decade included a senior citizens lounge, additional dressing rooms, a fitness centre, racquet courts, whirlpool and sauna and pre-school facilities at Cedar Hill; multi-purpose activity spaces, racquet courts and a fitness centre at G.R. Pearkes; and an ice arena and multi-purpose activity spaces, arts and crafts area and a full fitness centre at the Gordon Head centre.

The three sites on which Saanich has concentrated its recreation facilities were appropriate to meet current and future needs and there is room to accommodate expansion at all sites, Johnson said.

USER GROUPS and a public survey indicated an intensive development program was not required immediately but did reveal that minor alterations and additions were needed over the next five years.

The 34-page study report also recommends:

- High quality athletic fields be developed at Layritz, Lambrick, Cedar Hill, Lansdowne and Tillicum-Hampton parks.
- A skeletal trail system be adopted by council as a long-range objective and land be acquired to create the system as resources allow.
- All new subdivision plans or property redevelopment be reviewed by municipal staff to provide a link to the trail system.
- Neighborhood parks of less than one acre be deleted from the parks system.
- All new recreation facilities built in the next 10 years be located adjacent to existing facilities on the three major sites already developed.
- Council set as an objective park standards of four acres per 1,000 residents for neighborhood park space and eight acres per 1,000 residents for community open space.

THE CONSULTANT supported a Saanich Tennis Club request to have exclusive use of designated public courts on a contract basis for club activities if the club assumes certain public tennis responsibilities in return. These would include conducting tennis instruction programs, sponsoring clinics and workshops and allowing non-member participation in some club tournaments.

Duplication of service between Spectrum School's community school co-ordinator and Saanich parks department community recreation program supervisor exists, he said.

In the consultant's opinion the department supervisor should be able to do most of the co-ordinator's work "and therefore makes that position redundant."

SAANICH'S PROGRAM of installing underground automatic irrigation systems in major parks is a good one as it reduces maintenance, the consultant noted.

He suggested a ramp be installed at the Gordon Head pool to aid elderly patrons.

He urged a moratorium on racquet and squash court development because courts now built were not being used.

Heppel

Deputy chosen chief

Mike Heppel, deputy chief of the Victoria fire department for the last four years, has been chosen to succeed Eric Simmons in his job as fire chief.

Heppel, 39, was born in Victoria and joined the fire department in 1963.

He is to take over as chief Aug. 1, when Simmons will retire.

Heppel wouldn't comment on his appointment because the official announcement won't be made until Thursday's meeting of city council's personnel committee.

A spokesman in the mayor's office would only say "there's been a big leak and we don't know how it happened."

Heppel was chosen from a number of candidates after extensive interviewing by a panel including two psychologists from Vancouver.

Alcoholic centre facing closure without B.C. aid

Troubled Gillain Manor, a posh alcoholic treatment centre on Mount Newton in North Saanich, will close its doors in a few months unless its gets "adequate recognition" from the provincial government for its program, the Gillain Foundation has announced.

The foundation took over operation of the treatment centre last fall, after Abacus Cities, which was leasing it from Farmer Construction of Victoria, went into receivership. The alcoholism treatment program first opened in October, 1978 after 12 years of stop-and-start construction at Gillain Manor.

The manor can accommodate up to 100 patients at a time, but the patient load has been running at 20 to 30 a day, not sufficient to operate the centre and treatment program, which employ about 30 full-time and 15 part-time staff. Fees are $175 a day, and most patients spend $4,000 to $4,500 at the centre, program director Dr. Cecil Brown said Tuesday.

Since last fall, 400-500 patients have been served by the centre, he said.

Forced to pay the full cost themselves, many patients either enter institutions in other provinces where subsidies are available, or end up in acute-care hospitals, at greater cost to the province, Brown said.

The foundation has been negotiating, so far unsuccessfully, with the provincial government to provide a subsidy for patients similar to the subsidies for alcoholics in other treatment centres or in acute-care hospitals. Alcoholics often become "revolving door" patients, presenting a variety of ailments related to their alcholism which are treated independently, while the underlying cause is often undiagnosed and usually untreated, Brown said.

"Without a patient subsidy and despite the demand for treatment evidenced by numerous inquiries, Gillain has been unable to sustain sufficient admissions to cover expenses on a regular basis. The board of directors feels it would be irresponsible to continue indefinitely without confidence that it can meet its financial obligations and its commitment to excellence in patient care."

"Of particular concern to the board is that closure of the treatment centre would result in the fine and loyal professional team being dispersed and possibly lost to the province and to Canada," a press release from the foundation's board says.

For now, private donors are providing sufficient funds to keep the centre operating.

Brown said provincial assistance need not be for the full cost of treatment at the manor, but would give more people the option of receiving treatment at the centre.

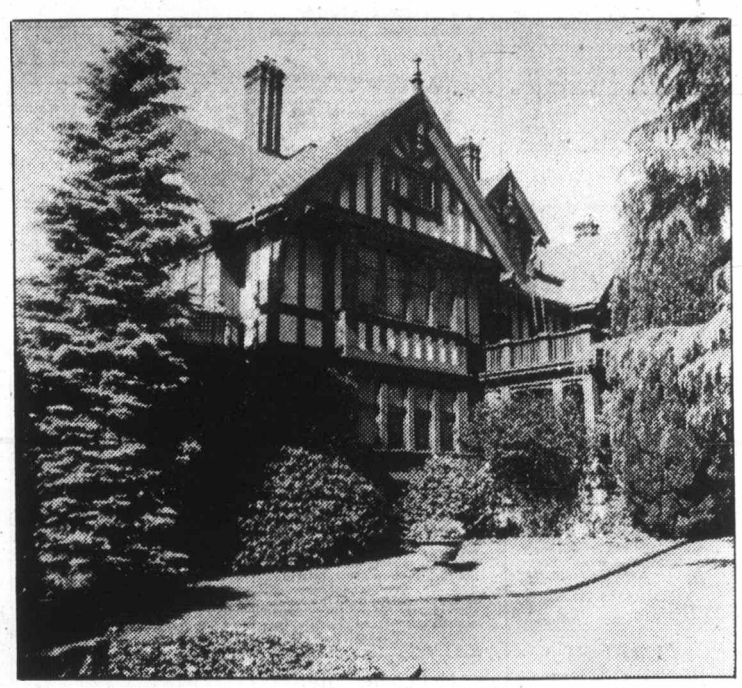

The way to wow big Bert

Twenty-five years ago today 20,000 people turned out for a Victoria parade honoring big Bert Thomas, who the day before had become the first swimmer to conquer Juan de Fuca Strait.

The former U.S. marine found himself bombarded with praise and prizes. They even made him the third freeman of the city of Victoria.

But his time for the 18-mile swim between Victoria and Port Angeles of 11 hours, 17 minutes and 30 seconds was beaten only a year later by Toronto teenager Marilyn Bell, who did it in 10 hours and 40 minutes.

Cliff Lumsdon of Toronto swam the strait in 11 hours and 33 minutes, also in 1956.

'One of the most Elizabethan of Maclure's designs'

Council moves to protect marked Maclure house

To save an old Samuel Maclure mansion in the Rockland area from destruction, Victoria city council has been asked to invoke a 30-day demolition freeze.

During the freeze, council is to determine whether the house at 1041 St. Charles merits designation as a heritage home.

And just in case the designation is deemed warranted, city solicitor Jakob de Villiers is to be instructed to prepare the necessary bylaw.

City council's planning committee set the wheels of designation in motion following a request from the owner of the house for a demolition permit.

The owner wants to tear down the house, which has been converted to a seven-suite apartment, and replace it with four single-family homes.

The mansion, referred to as the Charles Fox Todd House or "Illahie," was built by Victoria architect Samuel Maclure in 1907 for Charles Fox Todd, who later became a partner in his father's canning firm, J.H. Todd and Sons Horseshoe Brand Salmon.

The city's list of potential heritage homes describes the house as "one of the most Elizabethan of Maclure's designs."

The interior entrance hall, according to the inventory, is one of Maclure's finest spaces.

The mansion with its picturesque gables sits on nearly an acre of land.

Officials feel heat on fire safety rules

Victoria aldermen once again failed to come to grips Tuesday with the problem of fire safety regulations versus the preservation of old buildings.

The controversy was to be resolved once and for all at a meeting with an official of the provincial fire commissioner's office, but when it was all over, those present were even more confused than before.

In yet another attempt "to make this silly bureaucracy work," an impatient Ald. Robert Wright, chairman of city council's fire prevention committee, told the administrative officials to sit down and work out a solution to the problem.

"And I don't care whether it takes two weeks or two months," Wright said.

Those saddled with finding a solution are the city manager, the city solicitor, the city engineer, the fire chief, and a representative from the fire commissioner's office.

THE PROBLEM has been that rigid enforcement of provincial fire regulations and guidelines, aimed at improving fire safety in old buildings, has consistently threatened the closure and even demolition of numerous heritage buildings.

To upgrade old buildings in accordance with the 1980 National Building Code and provincial fire regulations is too costly in most cases. A few years ago, a number of rooming houses and residential hotels closed because the owners said the buildings weren't worth the expense of upgrading.

The problem surfaced again recently when the the Victoria fire chief, acting as the local deputy to the provincial fire commissioner, began issuing orders for the upgrading of nursing homes.

AT TUESDAY'S meeting, the committee wanted to find out whether the fire chief was too rigid in his application of the provincial guidelines for the upgrading of old buildings.

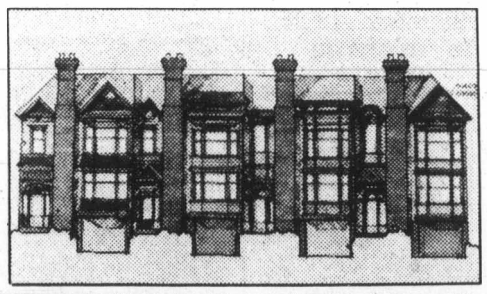

Ken Collier of the provincial fire commissioner's office hedged with his answer, saying he believed the guidelines allowed for a certain discretion.

But he wouldn't commit himself to specifics. When Wright asked whether the owner of a beautiful old mansion used as a nursing home with an open staircase could forgo the requirement for fire-separation walls and install a sprinkler system instead, Collier wouldn't give a direct answer.

Wright said if Collier wasn't sure, he could understand why the Victoria fire chief followed the guidelines without using any discretion.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE officials are to report back to the committee if and when they have come to a conclusion.

As a parting shot, Wright told them: "We want to save our old buildings, but we can't by rigidly applying the National Building Code and the provincial guidelines. We need direction."

Proposed housing for part of Rainbow site

High bid favored

Part of the former Rainbow site in Victoria West will be sold to Cheng-Wood Developments for a total price of $510,000 if city council accepts a recommendation from its housing committee.

Cheng-Wood was the high bidder in the second round of tenders for the site. The first bids weren't accepted because council decided after calling for tenders to scrap plans for a road through the development.

Cheng-Wood's plans call for the construction of 16 townhouses on 1.7 acres of the three-acre property.

The company will also spend $15,000 on beautification of the rest of the site which is to retained as a waterfront park.

The decision to sell part of the property at Russell and Robert was made by city council recently despite criticism from area residents.

Trident boss leaves

VAVEREK GOES BACK TO U.S.

Jerome Vaverek, the man who ran the financially-troubled Trident Aircraft Ltd. as it struggled for existence, has suddenly dropped out of the picture without much fanfare.

Derrick Lock, also an early company supporter and now vice-president, said the board of directors made a brief announcement last week that Vaverek had "relinquished" his position as chief executive officer to return to the United States.

He said there would have been a press release issued from Trident's Vancouver board office. However, the Colonist has no record of any such press release. Nor has Canadian Press.

Lock said Vaverek worked until last Thursday and was believed to have already moved from Saanich Peninsula. The number listed for his home phone is no longer in service.

Robert Whyte, elected chairman of the board and president in May, could not be reached for comment Tuesday night.

Since Vaverek's departure appeared sudden, Lock was asked if there had been any conflict at the top level of the Pat Bay operation.

"Not as far as I know. But then, normally this kind of thing wouldn't be discussed with a subordinate," he said.

However, he said he felt there might have been sound reasons for Vaverek's departure.

One was that Vaverek was known as a "start-up" man, someone who had the ability to get aircraft projects into motion before moving on to meet new challenges. He referred to himself as a "start-up" expert.

"And you have to consider that he had been here about 18 months and that he had seven children in Florida," Lock said, pointing out that it meant long trips each time Vaverek wanted to see his family.

Early in May, after the federal government announced it would honor its promise of a $2 million loan plus $2 million in loan guarantees, Vaverek said Trident appeared to be back in business and would hire 500 employees by mid-1983, twice the number predicted earlier.

Trident's future became an issue in the February federal election. The company had hired 112 people in 1979 for production of the Trigull aircraft on the basis of a federal loan, but had to lay off 107 when the Liberal government fell and the Conservatives decided to cancel the loan.

Commercial heritage at stake

Victoria city council is about to take another run at protecting commercial heritage buildings by offering tax incentives to the building owners.

The first bylaw to that effect was thrown out by the courts. It offered a freeze on assessment increases for 15 years.

The second bylaw, which over a five-year period provided for a 50-per-cent reduction in property taxes resulting from improvements, was never implemented.

The latest bylaw, endorsed Tuesday by city council's planning committee, would exempt owners of designated commercial heritage buildings for three years from property tax increases that result from rising assessments.

For a period of seven years, all improvements to such buildings would be exempt from assessment-based tax increases.

However, an increase in the mill rate would still trigger a proportionate rise in property taxes.

The incentive program wouldn't cover commercial buildings which are already designated heritage structures, such as the Empress Hotel.

The scheme also doesn't call for the immediate designation of additional buildings.

Instead, the city would start designation proceedings only when a building is threatened with demolition or substantial alterations that might change its heritage character.

This is because designation automatically entitles a building owner to the tax incentives and, according to Ald. Robert Wright, chairman of the planning committee, there's no need to offer incentives as long as a building is safe from demolition.

To make sure that a building worthy of designation isn't demolished, the city would compile a list of potential commercial heritage structures.

And whenever one of these buildings is threatened with demolition, designation procedures would be started.

Wright said he believed the program was far-reaching enough to protect the city's stock of commercial heritage buildings.

West Van boat leads

The 41-foot West Vancouver Kanata headed the pack in the Victoria-Maui race Tuesday after taking the lead Monday from Wizard of Portland, Ore.

Winds picked up slightly, coming from the northwest at about 12 knots.

Only 75 miles separated the first and tenth boats in the 2,300-nautical-mile race. Thirty-six yachts are taking part.

Police sport jeans, fuzz, hold back report details

By DON COLLINS
Colonist staff

That man who looks like Wild Bill Hickok with a five-o'clock shadow is your friendly neighborhood policeman.

He has long shuddered at the nickname "fuzz," but it's there on his cheeks in second-day growth today, serving the purpose of a somewhat odd strike weapon, along with the jeans and other civilian clothes that give him that gun-on-hip wild west look.

It's all part of the picture of a police strike that began legally but in limited fashion Wednesday in Victoria, Esquimalt and Oak Bay.

Both the police unions and administration said the public was being served in normal fashion.

The odd appearance wasn't interfering with duty, but the big weapon was some internal strategy that had no effect on the public, but which threatened to deal an economic blow to the municipalities.

While police union spokesmen didn't want to say what it was, the administration said it was a matter of not filling in details in reports—something that would necessitate overtime work and pay when the dispute is over.

"It will have to be done on someone's time—on overtime, and the longer this goes on the more overtime there will be," explained Victoria's deputy police chief, Jim Smith.

He said sub-headings, such as names and locations, were being put into such reports as those dealing with accidents, and that the rest of the essential information was recorded in the individual officer's notebook for use in the future.

Like others, Smith said there were no problems Wednesday.

"The men are doing the job," he said.

Some municipal officials feared that the switch from uniforms to civvies would make it difficult for citizens to identify police officers, but the very obvious holster and gun seemed to answer that concern.

"Then again, the cop could be mistaken for some visiting Albertan," cracked one sidewalk observer.

At any rate, police union spokesman Sgt. Bryan Bailey of the Victoria Police Association said officers have other means of identifying themselves when the occasion arises.

Bailey said he wanted to assure the public it would get full protection.

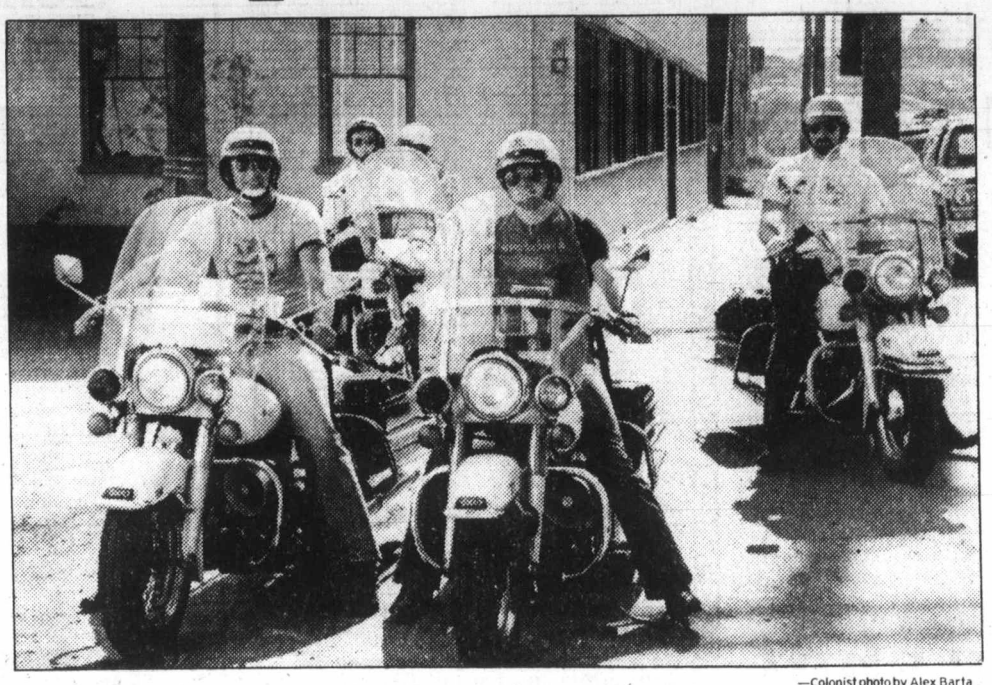

"We realize we have a duty to the public and we intend to carry that duty out," he said.

B.C. Federation of Labor secretary Dave MacIntyre, who has been acting as chief negotiator for the police added: "Our dispute is with the employer, not the public."

Police were in a legal strike position Tuesday when they were informed that mediator Bob Almgren had reported out of the dispute.

Involved are some 190 police officers below the rank of inspector. Their contracts in the three

NATO enjoys edge on Reds, surprising report claims

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — A liberal defence group says NATO is more powerful than the Warsaw Pact military forces, having outspent them for years.

The statement Wednesday by the Washington-based Centre for Defence Information contrasts with the Carter administration's view that the communist bloc is leaping ahead of the West in defence spending. That belief has led the U.S. government to plan for military expenditures of $1 trillion over the next five years.

"In this presidential election year it has become fashionable to denigrate the power of our armed forces," said retired Rear-Admiral Gene La Rocque, director of the centre. "But our study shows that the United States military is not weak or starved for funds."

The report said NATO had more nuclear weapons than the Soviet Union and was superior in virtually all elements of national power. And NATO "will retain the advantage in the future as plans to produce more than 20,000 nuclear weapons over the next decade are implemented."

The report noted that U.S. Defence Secretary Harold Brown said in February that by most relevant measures the U.S. remained the military equal or superior to the Soviet Union.

It added: "Even utilizing the CIA's questionable methodology for comparing military budgets (which assumes that the Soviets pay as much as the U.S. does for soldiers and weapons), combined NATO military spending has exceeded that of the Warsaw Pact for many years."

The report said that in 1979, NATO spent at least $215 billion, compared to $175 billion for the Warsaw pact.

Second lowest bid wins outfall project

A $3,115,000 contract to replace the trouble-plagued Clover Point sewage outfall was awarded Wednesday to the San Francisco-based company of Peter Kiewit Sons Co. Ltd.

But that may not be the final price tag.

The Capital Region Board adopted a recommendation from its solid waste management and sewage disposal committee that Kiewit's bid—the second-lowest—be accepted although the company requested a clause allowing it to claim for cost overruns if unforeseen problems crop up on the job.

Kiewit will install 3,500 feet of coated steel pipe—already acquired by the board at a cost of $214,000—from the Clover Point pumping station out to sea. The job is to be completed by November.

The low bidder, K. Viney Contracting Ltd. of Vancouver, was ruled ineligible by the committee's engineering consultants owing to inexperience and failure to meet bid bond specifications.

Directors refused to consider a letter from Viney which committee chairman Ald. Robert Wright said "substantially altered" the terms of its original $2,979,000 bid.

Wright did not elaborate on the Viney matter, but said he stood by the original recommendation for Kiewit, after having considered the letter.

The engineering consultants, CH2M Hill Canada Ltd., did not review in detail the three other bids, which ranged in price from $4.8 million to $7.3 million, reporting that apart from the cost-overrun clause, Kiewit's bid met the tender specifications in all respects.

The bid was accepted

SCALPEL TRADED

BALTIMORE (AP) — Johns Hopkins Hospital doctors say they have found a way to determine whether a lung tumor is harmless.

The procedure could eliminate the need for thousands of operations. (See also Page 28).

By using a computer-controlled radiological scanner, the doctors found that the density of a tumor can be used as a way of accurately and quickly determining whether a growth is dangerous.

Man's chest pains fault of an unknown brother

MOSCOW (AP) — Doctors found the unborn embryo of a 40-year-old man's twin in the man's chest after he complained of pains and breathing difficulty, a Soviet newspaper says.

Surgeons at the Azerbaijan State Institute for Medical Training thought at first that the man had a benign tumor, said the Baku Worker, a newspaper in the Azerbaijan capital.

But they found "a thick-walled, many-chambered cyst of a very large size that turned out to be an undeveloped human embryo," chief physician Panakh Alievich Aliev is quoted as saying.

"In the course of further examinations the surgeons found hair and bone."

The embryo had "a head with hair covering the back of it," Aliev said. "On the face there were undeveloped, swollen eye sockets. There was a palate and even an ossified tooth in the upper jaw.

"The body was covered with a soft, fatty membrane-like paste."

The embryo had caused one of the man's lungs to be only a third of the usual size, with only one lobe instead of three.

The man was identified only as "N" and was said to be a driver in Baku.

Abortion program in line

A pilot program announced barely a month ago to reduce the number of abortions in B.C. may get the axe as a result of provincial budget cuts.

A provincial health ministry spokesman said an estimated $290 million shortfall in provincial revenues means a number of programs may be cut back or eliminated, including the pilot program announced May 28 for the Interior.

The spokesman said the health ministry proposal involves six different centres. The proposal involves hiring additional staff, and the cost would depend on how many centres were actually approved.

Float plane lands safely in farm field

Five passengers and a pilot escaped injury when an Airwest Beaver float plane made an emergency landing about 6:15 p.m. Wednesday in a farmer's field near Maple Bay.

Duncan RCMP, who investigated, said the aircraft was on a scheduled flight from Duncan to Vancouver.

It landed upright in a field off the 1300 block of Herd Road.

Saudis fume, U.S. cools F-15 snub

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The U.S. state department Wednesday sought to play down a public dispute with Saudi Arabia by not commenting on sharp Saudi reaction to a congressional move to block its purchase of new weaponry.

Saudi ambassador Sheikh Faisal al Hejelan said Tuesday the United States was putting Israel ahead of its real interests in the Middle East and hinted his country might turn elsewhere for weapons if denied the equipment.

In Riyadh on Wednesday, Saudi Defence Minister Prince Sultan ibn Abdulaziz said Saudi Arabia would not take no for an answer.

"Our reply to this is that the kingdom will never ask for a weapon and be refused," he told Saudi military graduates.

The Saudi officials were reacting to a letter from 68 senators urging President Carter to refuse the sale of extra fuel tanks and multiple ejection bomb racks for U.S.-built F-15 jet fighter aircraft.

"We read a lot of speeches. We see a lot of statements. We respond to some but not to others," state department spokesman John Trattner said when asked about the Saudi statements.

The statements by Saudi officials used exceptionally sharp language in view of the close trade and security ties between their country and the United States.

U.S. officials said the Saudis have conveyed the same views privately before announcing them in public.

"It is long past time that the Israeli problem is placed in perspective and other vital interests of the United States, its key friends, the international community, world peace and certainly the overwhelming majority of people in the Middle East . . .," Faisal said in his statement.

"Much more than just the equipment which the statement today opposes selling to the kingdom is available through other sources—and without restrictions or conditions," he added.

Sultan's speech, reported by the Saudi press agency, blamed supporters of Israel for the Senate letter.

"We say to the Zionist lobby, which is putting pressure on during the period of the U.S. elections, that you are defeated wherever you are," he said.

Boil it, Saltspring drinkers told

Saltspring Islanders who get their water from St. Mary Lake are being advised to boil their water or get it from another source until health officials can determine what is causing unusual odors and tastes in lake water.

Regional health officer Dr. Allan Arneil said Wednesday that the cause of the odors and tastes has not been determined, and tests are being done on lake water at the moment. Until the results of those tests are available some time next week, Arneil said residents should take precautions in using lake water.

Arneil said that about 1,500 Saltspring Island residents take their water from the lake, either directly or from a water system which uses the lake as a source.

No complaints about unusual odors or tastes have been received from people drawing their water from the island's other main water source, Maxwell Lake, Arneil said.

Super-secrecy hides two-way talks

By JIM HUME
Colonist staff

Premier Bennett has ordered a veil of secrecy drawn across Friday's Alberta-B.C. cabinet meeting.

His press agent, Hall Leiren, delivered a memorandum on Wednesday to political reporters assigned to cover what the premier has termed "the historic meeting," spelling out the ground rules but giving no basic reasons for extraordinarily tight security.

The rules state that all reporters, even those assigned to the legislative press gallery and already having security clearance, will require special credentials for the conference.

Reporters have also been informed that once Bennett and Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed enter Government House to start their one-day session, all reporters will be asked to leave the grounds of Government House.

It also proclaims "there will be no statements issued, or interviews, between the time the meeting starts and the 3:30 p.m. windup."

In effect, the press restrictions mean that reporters will be confined to questions on the run as Lougheed and Bennett leave the legislative buildings shortly before 10 a.m. and further questions on the fly as the two leave their car and go behind the doors of Government House.

The press gallery executive immediately protested the arrangements and objected to the ruling that once the meeting starts, reporters will be asked to leave and await a 4:30 p.m. press conference back at the Legislature.

Gallery president Jake Banky, in his official protest to Leiren, said all members of the gallery "take strong exception to the press arrangements made by your office . . . We question the need for special passes for gallery members who already carry government-issued passes which adequately identify them.

"More important, we wonder at the reasoning behind the decision to banish the press from the grounds of Government House once the meeting gets under way.

"Are you suggesting that, otherwise, we would be peeking through the windows?

"Surely it would have been more appropriate to observe the normal courtesies granted to the press on occasions of this sort."

There had been no response late Wednesday from Leiren or the premier.

Bennett indicated earlier this week that the tight security was being ordered to enable the Alberta delegates to the meeting "to feel secure," but members of the Alberta press corps contacted Wednesday expressed the same dismay and concern as that expressed by their counterparts in B.C.

They say it isn't Lougheed's style to avoid the media or hide behind security blankets.

Leiren and Bennett were also playing coy on the times of arrival and the
